The acknowledged leader of the agents who killed the priest, former Captain Grzegorz Piotrowski, was Service Servic ordered jailed for 25 years. The state prosecutor had asked that the death sentence be imposed.

The court also ordered a 25-year prison term - the maximum under Polish law - for Adam Pietruszka, a former colonel who had insisted that he was innocent of charges of aiding and abetting the killers.

Two former lieutenants who parncipated in the murder of the Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko received lesser jail sentences: 15 years for Leszek Pekala and 14 years for Waldemar Chmielewski. All the oflicers were stripped of their rank when they were charged.

The judgment appeared lenient in the case of Mr. Piotrowski, who had been widely expected to get the death sentence. But lawyers for Father Popieluszko's family had asked that his life be spared, saying that the slain priest had opposed capital punishment.

Artur Kujawa, the head of the five-member panel of judges, said the four defendants had "the objective of killing Popieluszko and they accomplished it. They were fully (Continued on Page 2, Col. 2)

The four were arrested in apparent reprisal for Britain's breaking of diplomatic relations and expulsion of Libyan diplomats in April after a British policewoman was killed by shots fired from inside the Libyan Embassy.

The release was negotiated by Terry Waite, a senior deputy to Archbishop Robert Runcie, the spiritual leader of the Church of England. Mr. Waite, a deputy for overseas affairs, is an articulate in-ternational troubleshooter for the church who has won praise for this and other missions.

Church sources said they read with some annoyance stories in Wednesday's newspapers about how Mr. Waite's mission was undertaken at the request of the prime minister. On Wednesday, the church said the archbishop's first letter to Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader, concerning the four detainees "was written on Aug. 1, 1984. From that day onwards, active negotiations were under way to arrange for Mr. Waite to visit Libya." The church said Mrs. Thatcher's letter only "encouraged an initia-tive that was already under way."

The Waite mission was actually instigated by the wife of a hostage, Mr. Russell, who wrote to Arch-bishop Runcie in July, pointing out that her husband was an organist in the Anglican church in Tripoli.

Mr. Reagan's three priorities in Wednesday night's speech were the MX missile program, which is threatened in Congress; covert U.S. aid to anti-government rebels in Nicaragua, which was rejected again by Congress in October, and the Strategic Defense Initiative, a plan for space-based missiles to stop incoming enemy missiles.

The MX program was saved in the Senate in June by the tic-breaking vote of Vice President George Bush. Wednesday night, Mr. Rea-gan called the voting on the issue this spring "a critical test of our resolve" to back up the U.S. arms negotiators who will Soviet counterparts in Geneva next month.

"Let us begin by challenging conventional wisdom: there are no constraints on the human mind, no walls around the human spirit, no barriers to our progress except those we ourselves erect." Mr. Rea-gan said in the nationally televised speech Wednesday night to a joint session of Congress.

Mr. Reagan, who was greeted with a long standing ovation when be entered the House chamber and frequently was interrupted by applause, concluded his speech by introducing two "heroes" who he said epitomized American values: Jean Nguyen, who fled Vietnam with her family after the fall of Saigon and is to graduate from West Point in May, and Clara Hale, a woman from New York's Harlem neighborhood who cares for the children of beroin addicts. While hailing the "new freedom" he said his administration had brought to the United States, the president added, "We are not here to congratulate ourselves on what we have done, but to challenge ourselves to finish what has not yet been done."

His list of unfinished domestic business ranged from the passage of tax simplification to the construction of a manned space sta-

Mr. Reagan made specific pleas for two favorite military projects, the MX intercontinental ballistic missile and the controversial Stra-tegic Defense Initiative plan aimed at developing a nonnuclear defense space against nuclear missiles. He made clear that he will resist congressional demands for further trims in the military budget to reduce the federal deficit, "Spending for defense is investing in things that are priceless: peace and freedom," he said. Mr. Reagan began his address by contending that, "after four years of united effort, the American people have brought forth a nation renewed - stronger, freer and more secure than ever before. "Four years ago, we said we would invigorate our economy by giving people greater freedom and incentives to take risks, and letting them keep more of what they carned," he said. "We did what we promised, and a great industrial giant is reborn."

Many of the proposals Mr. Reagan made were familiar features of earlier speeches. But he gave more emphasis than in the past to themes of social justice and to economic help for minorities.

The proposals include enterprise zones that would provide tax incentives in depressed urban areas, a lower minimum wage for teen-agers, support of the Job Training Partnership Act, tuition tax credits and health vouchers and encouragement for low-income public housing residents to own and manage their dwellings.

When Mr. Reagan talked about enterprise zones he turned to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat of Massachusetts, who sat behind him.

"Now, Mr. Speaker, I know we agree that there must be no foreotten Americans," Mr. Reagan said. Let us place new dreams in a million hearts and create a new generation of entrepreneurs by passing

UN Agency Dismisses Criticism By Ethiopia

By Iain Guest onal Herald Tribune GENEVA - Poul Hartling, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, on Thursday dismissed as "political" charges by Ethiopia that his agency has favored Sudan and shown bias against Ethiopia in distributing refugee assistance.

We have heard this before," he said at a press conference, in reference to charges made Wednesday by Ethiopia's ambassador to the United Nations in Geneva, Kaffa Kebede, that the refugee agency had exaggerated estimates of Ethiopian refugees in Sudan and Somalia and that its aid program in Sudan has "enticed" people out of "A good part of it is political if a country says you can't work in an-other country," Mr. Hartling said. We keep to a humanitarian, nonpolitical role. We shall help where people are in need."

Mr. Hartling announced Thursday that the refugee agency is launching a special appeal for $96.4 million for the rest of the year to assist refugees in Sudan, Somalia, Ethiopia and the Central African Republic.

The bulk of the money, he said, would be spent in Sudan, with $68.2 million being used for Ethiopian refugees in the east of the country and $5.7 million for about 60,000 refugees from Chad

UN officials say Ethiopia, with about seven million people affected by famine, has received $375 million in international aid since November, while Sudan, with 4.5 million affected people, has received $90 million during the same period.

Mr. Hartling said that between 250,000 and 300,000 Ethiopians have fled to Sudan since October and that the agency's appeal is based on the assumption that the figure will rise to 600,000 by the middle of this year.

He said $43.7 million will be spent on the purchase and distribution of food. He added that there was an urgent need to get food into eastern Sudan before June, when rains are expected to hamper food

Italy Asks Sofia to Extradite Celenk

ROME (AP) — Italy asked Bulgaria on Thursday to extradite as reputed Turkish gang leader, Bekir Celenk, one of seven persons charged with complicity in the 1981 assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II. Mr. Celenk, three other Turks and three Bulgarians are to be tried in May on charges that they were involved in organizing the attack on the pope by Mehmet Ali Agea Mr. Celenk appeared before reporters in Sofia on Thursday as Bulgarian officials announced that they were considering their own trial of Mr. Agea. However, they did not specify what changes

Mr. Agea might face. Yordan Ormankov, a Bulgarian Interior Ministry official, said Bulgar is has "categorical evidence of Agca's guilt," but he said the public prosecutor's office would have the final word on whether he will be tried.

Mr. Agca, a Turk, is serving a life sentence for wounding the pope in St. Peter's Square in May 1981, Mr. Celenk is accused of offering Mr. Aga 3 million Deutsche marks (then about $1.2 million) to shoot the pope. Mr. Celenk also has been linked in drug trafficking and gun running

Nicaragua Rebels to Seek Funds by Selling Bonds

WASHINGTON - To inves- corporation established by .it. tors with ideological faith and a little extra cash, Nicaraguan rebels who seek to overthrow their country's Marxist-led government plan to offer interest-bearing bonds.

Leaders of the main rebel group. the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, which has turned to private donors since Congress cut off U.S. aid to the guerrillas in June, liken the idea to Israeli bonds sold to American Jews and other supporters of Israel.

The bonds are not for everybody. said a rebel spokesman, Bosco Matamoros: "They are for sophis-

U.S. funding to all the rebels groups came to $24 million in 1984. Since the funds were halted, officials of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force say they have raised about $1 million a month from private sources to cover expenses of about $600,000. They reportedly also have received considerable aid from El Salvador, Honduras, where they are based, and Israel. The Reagan administration has begun an intense campaign to persuade Congress to approve $14 million in new aid set aside in October, but Congress is expected to deny any more financing through the Central Intelligence Agency.

A Justice Department spokesman, John Russell, said the bond issue involved "no violation of the Neutrality Act," because the act "doesn't mention raising money." But the rebels may have to register as foreign agents to sell the bonds. Mr. Matamoros said that "we are not working on the assump-tion" that the rebels, now thought to number more than 12,000, will overthrow the Sandinist govern-

Year of Fiscal Austerit Pays Off for Venezuela

By Juan De Onis

lus Angeles Times Service CARACAS — After a year of mposed austerity, President Jaime Lusinchi has halted a four-year decline in Venezuela's economy and restored the international credit of his oil-producing country.

On weekends, the discotheques in Las Mercedes still are jammed with dancers. Parking places are hard to find around the best restaurants and boutiques.

But evidence that Venezuelans still can indulge habits acquired during the oil boom is accompabelt-tightening is taking place, primarily in the government.

In fact, the government under Mr. Lusinchi, who took office in February 1984, saved so much money last year that it accumulated a budget surplus equal to 4 percent of the gross national product. Much of that surplus came from oil exports and a 32 percent devaluation of the currency, the bolivar. And, instead of spending this windfall on new projects, the money in circulation was reduced and some internal debts paid off.

"A Playing Card Factory," by an unidentified artist, in "Sun King" show.

The Sun King, Seen Dimly

by John Russell

ASHINGTON — Last year's World's Fair in New Orleans may have been pretty much of a bust, but in the first hard. may have been pretty much of a bust, but in the fine-arts field there were some good ideas that floated free of the general disaster. One of them was the idea of an exhibition about Louis XIV. In terms of tailoring, Louis XIV and New Orleans were a perfect fit. Louisiana itself was named after Louis XIV, even if its lazysounding, pleasure-loving syllables do not exactly call to mind the nonstop bard worker and nonpareil authoritarian who ruled France for so many years. As for New Orleans, it took its name from Louis XIV's brother, the Duc d'Orièans, and to this day a street in the French Quarter is named after one of Louis XTV's illegitimate sons, the Duc long ago dropped from the atlases, but during the latter part of the reign of Louis XIV it stood for a large part of the Mississippi

It could be argued that this particular French connection did little for Louisiana. But Louis XIV was nonetheless a commanding figure in the Europe of his day, and there was hardly a department of French life that did not take a brisk step forward during the first part of his long reign. In the 1660s, for instance, he brought his colossal energies, his eye for detail and his implacable will to bear appearing the centralization of the French arts and sciences. Not only did he reorganize the Académie Française as the arbiter of language and literature, but he set up the Academies for dance (1661), science (1666), music (1669) and architecture (1771).

In 1663 the painter Charles Lebrun was put in charge of the Gobelins factory in Paris, which forthwith became the headquarters not only of the tapestries that it still produces today but of the totality of the decorative arts. Painters, sculptors, engravers, weavers, dyers, embroiderers, goldsmiths, woodcarvers, cabinetmakers, workers in marble and mosaicists — all worked under the general direction of Lebrun in the interests of homogeneous and omnidirectional effort. Bent on changing the Château de Versailles from a comfortable hunting lodge into a royal residence, a hospitality center on the grandest scale and the locus of all power and patronage, Louis XIV had work for everyone, from glazier to hydraulic engineer and from legal draftsman to ap-

Louis XIV further distinguished himself as a man of war, a collector of antiquities and a patron of the art of landscape garden-ing. Though not initially very bright, he learned from masters in all that pertained to the management of other human beings.

many ways ideally polite - even his manner of raising his hat was calibrated to the timest fraction of an inch according to the rank of the person to be greeted — he was capable of historic rages that caused even great officers of state to stare at their shoes in silence for a full quarter of an hour. Things were done his way, when he was around, whether the matter in hand was the new ballet in which he proposed to take part or the building of a great national monument like the Invalides.

It is clear from all this that the manifold activities of Louis XTV could be the subject of a fascinating exhibition. "The Eye of Jefferson," put on not so long ago at the National Gallery in Washington, showed how great is the potential of a visual biography of an exceptional human being who had exceptional opportunities and made the most of every one of them. It is also relevant that the activity of Louis XIV was docu-mented, whether directly or indirectly, by writers who had in the highest degree the art of evocation. In the memoirs of the Duc de Saint-Simon and the letters of Madame de Sévigné, Louis XIV is as vivid to us as if he had just stepped into the room; and there are many other, less famous men and women who did the same kind of thing on a smaller

The New Orleans exhibition had the blessing in France of Pierre Lemoine, chief curator of the Château de Versailles and a man who knows the history of Louis XIV as well as the rest of us know our own front door. Hopes ran high. There was talk of loans that had no precedent, and of a comprehensive overview that would give due space to Louithe "Great Century" in France itself.

OW that "The Sun King" has arrived at the Corcoran Gallery here, where it can be seen through April 7, it turns out to be a large and well-intended but finally rather insubstantial affair. This may be due to difficulties that did not present themselves in the case of "The Eye of Jefferson," and it may also be due to the fact that the Louisiana State Museum does not have the clout of the National Gallery. But, for whatever reason, the age of the Sun King does not come across in this exhibition as a key moment in European civilization.

One reason among others is that the level of the portraits on view is really not very high. The portrait of Louis XIV by Hyacinthe Rigaud from Versailles is a celebrated image (though the catalog goes rather far in saying that it is "as familiar as the Mona Lisa") and it undeniably conveys the official message, which was that this was the greatest king of his day and, indeed, one of the greatest kings who ever lived. It also shows

With age, he acquired the kind of majesty us that even in late middle age Louis XIV that both awes and intimidates. Though in was still vain enough of his straight and strong legs to dress them up in blue silk stockings and have Rigaud show almost more of them than was seemly.

Even more famous is the portrait of Mother Angelique Arnauld, the abbess of Port Royal, by Philippe de Champaigne, It stands out even in the Louvre as one of the masterpieces of French 17th-century painting, and in "The Sun King" it seems to come from another world -- a world in which quality of paint is allied to psychological penetration and an appropriate inwardness of feeling. The abbess of Port-Royal was, of course, one of the few people who dared to stand up to Louis XIV in matters of religion. Not only did Philippe de Champaigne give her a di-mension of human dignity that is quite lacking in most of the other portraits in this show, but he threw in a portrait of the abbey itself that is a model of delicacy and refine-ment in an age when French landscape painting had mainly a documentary interest. It is one of the ironies of "The Sun King" that Louis XIV's foremost woman adversary should come off so much better, in terms of the painted image, than any of the women he loved. The room that includes portraits of the Duchesse de la Vallière, the Marquise de Montespan and the Marquise de Maintenon. not to mention others less closely associated with the king, might have been devised ex-pressly to discredit the women in question. No one could possibly infer, for instance. from the portrait of Louise de la Vallière that she was famous for her silvery blonde hair, the perfect whiteness of her skin and the delicate suffusion of color that came over her teatures at all appropriate times. Nor does the daub in question suggest her prodigious reserves of character. (After a pregnancy that she had done her best to keep secret, she got up on the very evening of the day that the king's baby was delivered, came down in a ball dress and conducted herself in company as if nothing had happened.)

VEN so, there are human insights to be found here and there—notably in the elegant sculpture of Louis XIV in his adolescence, trampling down his enemies. In that little bronze we see him in his official capacity, both as people wished him to be and as he truly was. But there ought to be a way, difficult as it may be, to show him in a more private capacity. Few men have ever had less time to themselves, but we know from what was written down about him that he was not always on public exhibition, and that sometimes he broke down and hummed (out of tune) the passages from the operas of the day that were flattering to

And up in Central Park, it seems that Frederick Law Olmsted's original south entrance to the park, including a massive mar-ble arch, fountains and gardens, went missing some 50 years ago.

Iris Love, the New York-born classical archaeologist who won international fame with her excavations in Knidos, on the southwest coast of Turkey, where she found the long-buried sanctuary of Aphrodite Euploia and, possibly, parts of the long-van-ished fourth-century B.C. Aphrodite of Praxiteles, has been invited to undertake the dig for Olmsted's lost work.

Miss Love says that Central Park's massive entrance was torn down and buried by the Olympian city improver Robert Moses in 1932. Although she has her eye on a suspi-cious bulge between the 66th Street transverse and Central Park Zoo, she is not yet certain where the missing pieces are.

It is, Miss Love remarks, rather odd that she has uncovered ancient ruins and cannot find one that is relatively brand-new. However, serious research has not yet begun: This will happen when necessary funds and permits have been obtained.

Funds and permits are the archaeologist's basic spadework. This month Iris Love is making her 18th annual application to the Turkish government to dig at Knidos. It will be either ignored or refused.

Although she worked harmoniously and triumphantly at Knidos, which is on a peninsula south of Bodrum, for 12 years, in 1977 the area was turned into a military zone and

Suddenly to have to stop literally in midstream - I feel loss, frustration, nostalgia, she says. "It would have been a lifetime project and one that I would have with great pleasure and happiness devoted myself to in every way. I also feel responsible to those who have helped me from a financial and academic viewpoint. That's why I feel obliged to keep applying for my permit year

In the meantime, Miss Love, a tall blonde who socializes as energetically as she digs (her publications include learned articles for the American Journal of Archaeology and a profile of Franco Zeffirelli for Andy Warhol's Interview and she was nearly the subiect of a Lina Wertmuller film), has not been losing time. Convinced that the origins of Approdite are, contrary to conventional opinion, Cretan, she has been working in western Crete and she is also preparing to dig for a temple of Aphrodite in the center of Naples. If her calculations are correct, the temple is somewhere behind the Excelsion Hotel and directly beneath three buildings: a convent, a private palazzo and the military archives building, which is at present used for interrogations of suspected terrorists. Funds and permits are, of course, still lacking but she is confident that she will get both and will uncover a temple to Aphrodite of the same extremely rare round shape as in Knidos. (The Knidos discovery in 1969 was hailed on the front page of The New York Times with a picture of Miss Love in a miniskirt.) Her zest for publicity and the fact that she did not complete her Ph.D. requirements are often held against her. "Archaeologists are, which they shouldn't be because archaeology is an international exchange, among the most malicious, vicious group of scientists," she says. She and the British Museum have not been on speaking terms since 1970, when she stated that a neglected object in their basement, starkly known as Head 1314, was the missing head of the Aphrodite of Praxiteles. An international ruckus followed.

If she had completed her Ph.D. (she passed her orals but did not write her dissertation) she would, she says, be accepted as a more conventional figure. "It would have eliminated a point of criticism for those who think three letters make one more intelli-

As for her worldliness - her Knidos dig was visited by among others, Rudolf Nure-yev, Jacqueline and Aristotle Onasis and Mick and Bianca Jagger — she says this helps win funds and influence people (she is hoping right now that her old chum, Jerry Zipkin, adjutant of Nancy Reagan, will help persuade the Turks to evacuate their army so she can get back to the Knidos dig). A lively present, she claims, helps clarify the past.

"As an archaeologist I work so often with things that are past and people who are dead 2,000 years that it is fascinating to meet people who are architects and artists today. As an archaeologist I am possibly putting ideas into ancient architects' and artists heads that weren't there. The more I learn, the more I believe people haven't changed

RIS Cornelia Love was supposed to be named Audrey Barbara after her mother, a member of the Guggenheim family. Apparently her father, Cornelius Ruxton Love, a stockbroker and art collector, renamed her on the way to her christening but she has never got the story quite straight.

"Isn't it terrible to be an archaeologist trying to understand ancient civilizations and not even to know how you got your own name?" Whatever its origins, it is a name she likes: "Iris is Greek, Cornelia is Roman and Love is universal,"

Her devotion to Aphrodite began with her arrival in Knidos on Aug. 3, 1966, when she was on the bowsprit of a lishing boat and dolphins guided the craft to the port. Dolphins are sacred to Aphrodite, as are geese (Miss Love no longer eats (oie gras), bees, the color red, the number 5 and apples ("Now those I do eat because I think they are meant to be eaten"). She came to Greek mythology through an English governess.

"I always loved Athena as the goddess of wisdom and warrior. I even think I had a crush on her. I loved Apollo because he was handsome and Hermes because he was so quick-witted from the day he was born. I was brainwashed by Homer, I thought Aphrodite was a coquette, very silly, and I didn't have respect for her.

"I didn't go to Knidos for her, I went because its potential hadn't been realized and because it was a city that had colonized other cities. I thought it would tell us about a time we know so little about, the 11th to the 6th century, B.C."

While at Smith College (class of 1955) Iris Love wrote a paper correctly denouncing the Metropolitan Museum's famous terra-cotta Etruscan warriors as fakes (they were con-signed to the basement after museum officials, warned by Miss Love that she planned to publish her findings, blandly announced that they had known all along that the statues were fake).

Knidos had already been excavated notably in the mid-19th century by Sir Charles Newton, who sent 384 crates of objects back to the British Museum. Iris Love adored the place the moment she saw it - "It's very close to the gods, a place where everything meets, the sea and the mountains and the sky" - but she thinks she was allowed to dig there only because it was assumed to have been thoroughly excavated.

"I think they gave it to me because they thought there was nothing there, and it turned out to be the religious capital of Asia Minor." Knidos was the prosperous and culturally rich religious center of the Dorian Hexapolis, a confederation of six cities: three sites in Rhodes, the island of Kos and Halicarnassus (now Bodrum). In addition to important examples of civil and religious architecture and objects, Miss Love found

Work Like a Horse, Eat Like a Hummingbird

by Nancy Jenkins

T EW YORK - David Yudain, 29. a vice president of Sotheby's, starts the day with a freshly opened can of Nutrament, which he describes as a "sort of grown-up baby formula." Cheryl Garnant, 36, a professional masseuse, skips lunch in favor of a late breakfast of Chinese takeout food, bought the day before. Sam Bemiss, 29, an investment banker at Goldman, Sachs & Co., never eats breakfast, tries not to eat lunch and exists on nibbles of this and that throughout his 12-hour working day. Cherie Tripp, 35, a self-described entrepreneur, snacks on Lean Cuisine, often consuming as many as three or four of the frozen, single-portion diet meals in a day.

What unites them all is a manner of eating that is becoming a habit with many New York professionals, particularly those in their 20s and 30s. The phenomenon, which seems to be spreading throughout the United States, has excited the food-service industry and caused Chinese takeout restaurants and street-side food vendors alike to flourish.

It is called grazing, snacking, browsing. noshing. Some call it eating, as opposed to dining. Sidney W. Mintz, an anthropologist at Johns Hopkins University, describes it as "brief meal-like interventions throughout the day." And Graham T.T. Molitor, the president of Public Policy Forecasting Inc., a private consulting organization in Washing-son, refers to it as "eating hummingbird-style: a little bit here, a little bit there."

Although nutritionists say this is not necessarily an unhealthy way to eat, some soci--ologists are concerned about its long-term

Why do people eat like this? The answer, from a loud chorus of voices, is that there is no time for anything else. "I'm always in a corporate relations at Sotheby's. "Because of my schedule, I'm more concerned with getting enough to eat than getting too much."

"My work life is rather erratic, and I run from one thing to another," said Tripp, echoing the theme. "When I'm out, I end up eating a bowl of noodles from Larmen Dosanko."

"Probably 16 out of 20 workdays, I eat lunch at my desk," said Peter Kershan, 31, an associate with the law firm of Herzfeld & Rubin. Unlike his wife, Martha, who is also a awyer. Kershan said he draws the line at breakfast and dinner in the office. "In the positions we're both in now," he said, "we have to concentrate on our jobs. I don't know if it's the city or our professions — probably a combination of the two — but our time is really tight these days."

"I work for myself, and when you do that, you're busy 12 hours a day," said Garnant, who has practiced Swedish massage for the last 10 years. Often too busy to stop for lunch, she grabs an apple or a couple of bites of peanut butter instead. "I'd love to be able to have someone prepare the food and I could sit down and eat it," she said. "Sometimes I buy fruit and just let it sit in the fridge and rot, but if someone served it to me, I'd eat it gladly."

CCORDING to Mintz, there is both a A real shortage of time in the modern world and what he calls an "artificial shortage of time."

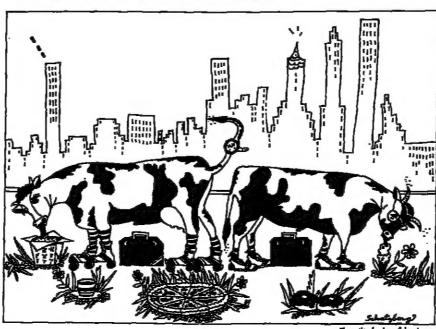

"This society is more interested in increasing consumption than in providing the time in which consumption can take place," he said. In his forthcoming book, "Sweetness and Power." an analysis of the role of sugar in history, to be published in May by Viking Penguin, Mintz points out that people tend to consume different things simultaneously.

hurry," said Yudain, who is in charge of such as a sandwich and work, or popcorn and a movie, or pizza and television.

Others believe the recent entry of droves of women into the work place has contributed to this change in eating habits. In 1981. according to Molitor, 52 percent of American women over 16 were working; by 1992, he said, the figure may reach 70 percent. The trend is toward dual-income families and more disposable income," he said, and as a corollary, "time is more precious." Anything that appears to save time - whether fast food, restaurant dining, convenience frozen foods or combining eating with other activities - will be welcome.

How this change - in the kind of food eaten and the way it is consumed - came about is not clear. Most of the people interviewed said they remember family meals taking place with great regularity. They also remember a falling away from that pattern. Yudain, for example, said he adopted new eating habits when he went away to boarding school: "The food was really awful. We tended to skip meals and make do with pizza in between." Tripp recalled that her mother was interested in nutrition and served wellbalanced meals, but "If Birds Eye didn't make it, we didn't cat it," she said. "When the first McDonald's opened in Pittsburgh, I used to take a bus five miles and back just to Whatever the reasons, the evidence is clear that more people, especially those under 35, are eating smaller meals more and more frequently throughout the day - mostly on the run, more often than not alone. If these people are setting the pace for the future, fewer meals will be eaten in what we think of as traditional family style, gathered around a table for a ritual sharing of food and conversation. Some sociologists are worried about the long-term effects of such solitary dining.

Of course, if a meal is traditionally defined as a meat and two vegetables, what is being eaten now cannot be called a meal anymore. When first questioned, Bemiss, the investment banker, said he eats nothing until a late dinner of salad or pizza in front of the television. Upon further questioning, however, he listed a wide range of items he eats throughout his day, including a doughnut, a cup of coffee with milk and sugar, a sandwich or hot dog, ice cream, yogurt, cookies, a glass of juice and, if he plays tennis before work, an omelet for breakfast. Clearly Bemiss eats; he just doesn't eat what his mother, who lives in Richmond, Virginia, would OMMENTING on this lack of food awareness, Dr. Joan Gussow, chair-man of nutrition education at Teachers College, Columbia University, said: "People today don't know where their food comes from - they don't even know that they eat. A person who doesn't know that he's eating has a magical belief that his body will take care of itself. I would argue that that is a very scary thing."

Restaurateurs are monitoring the trend, especially since restaurant dining is growing nationwide among all social groups. The National Restaurant Association in Washington reports that food and drink sales in eating places are expected to rise by 8.6 percent in 1985, to $112.3 billion, and sales in fast-food restaurants are predicted to rise even more, by 9.6 percent, to $47.1 billion.

Grazing is the restaurateurs' preferred term for the new trend in eating. "We connect it with the food courts that have grown up in shopping mails," said Jeffrey R. Prince, a senior director of the restaurant association. Which came first, the grazing or the places in which to graze, is debatable. "Now we find restaurants are doing all sorts of things to provide meals on the hoof, hors d'ocuvres options, new takeout options," Grazing is not necessarily detrimental to one's nutritional well-being. "There's no in-trinsic virtue in eating meals," Dr. Gussow of Teachers College said, "and there's nothing more nutritious about three meals a day. It is quite possible to eat well, to get through the day healthfully, on what you pick up on the streets. Our closest ancesiors were hunters and gatherers who just are what they caught throughout the day.

"But," she went on, "there's a symbolic meaning to food that is very important, Breaking bread together has very deep meanings. It is very difficult to sit at a table together without engaging with each other. I believe the 'coming apartness' of our society is related to the 'coming apartness' of our food habits."

"At 6 or 7 o'clock in my neighborhood" said Cherie Tripp, who lives near the United Nations building, "I see all these single men and women, all nattily clad, loading up on salads at the Koreans'. They take their salads and go across the street to pick up their nightly movie from the video rental. Then they go home, sit down, eat their salad and turn on the flick."

ONDON - The last quarter century has been hard on the grand old luxury restaurants of Europe's major cities. The Hostaria dell'Orso in Rome, Maxim's and Lasserre in Paris, the Operakalleren in Stockholm. Sabatini in Florence, the Sacher in Vienna, Horcher in Madrid, Mirabelle in London - all of them still exist, and a few still serve very good food, but none of them can any longer be considered a pacesetter.

One need not look far for an explanation. The old-fashioned gastronomic palaces were owned by businessmen who employed chefs to turn out classic dishes and a few unchanging specialties; most of the top tables of today are in restaurants owned by chefs who put a premium on creativity. Very often their places are small, and some are understaffed. as the true grand luxe restaurant never was and must never be; many cannot afford in this era of high wages, the whole panoply of commis, waiter, captain, maître d'hôtel and sommelier. And while well appointed, they are seldom opulent in the tradition of 1960.

There are, of course, several exceptions. Taillevent in Paris, considered by many to be the city's greatest restaurant, is owned by Jean-Claude Vrinat, a brilliant front-of-thehouse man, not by the chef. Claude Deligne; and the most talked about restaurant on the Côte d'Azur, the Chantecler in the Hötel Negresco in Nice, has been restored to its prewar glory by a hired hand, the young chef Jacques Maximin.

Egon Ronay, the British gastronome and midebook editor, estimates that building, outfitting and staffing a truly luxurious restaurant in the Mayfair or Knightsbridge areas of central London would cost something like $3 million before a meal was served. Not surprisingly, not many such places come into being these days, in the British capital or elsewhere. Two of the best luxury restaurants in London, and a couple of others that come close to the top of the list, are to be found in hotels. Anton Mossiman of the Dorchester, a Swiss, and Michel Bourdin of the Connaught, a Frenchman, are enabled by the resources of their owners to show off their talents in sumptuous settings that they could never have afforded by themselves. For whatever reasons — a dislike for management, a preference for big kitchens, inertia Messrs. Deligne, Mossiman, Maximin and Bourdin have chosen not to strike out on their own, at least for now.

To my mind, the truly posh establishment is best reserved for special occasions birthdays, anniversaries, holidays, the one or two splurges of a trip. For most people, economics dictate that course; for the rest, a sense of proportion ought to. Nothing is likely to pall faster than a succession of meals in luxury restaurants, by which I mean those that provide sophisticated cooking. rich and elaborate and often organized in four or five courses; great wines; costly place settings and surroundings, including a profusion of flowers: and prompt and polished

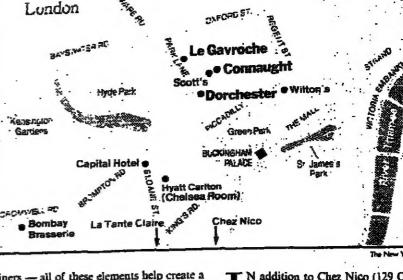

It is intriguing in this connection to notice the habits of the proprietors of superstar restaurants in France. Last summer, in Eugenie-les-Bains, the night after having served a group of us mere mortals the same Rabelaisian feast he was cooking for the president of France, Michel Guerard asked us to join him for dinner. It could not have been simpler no cream, no caviar, no foie gras, no lobster, no oysters. Simple foods, simply but beautifully cooked, with a seraphic chocolate mousse at the end. Likewise, on his days off. the elegant Vrinat likes to pop into plebeian bistros like Chez la Vieille, Adrienne Biasin's snuggery on Rue de l'Arbre-Sec.

LL of this is by way of prelude to answering a question that visitors to London often ask: Where should we go for a really gala evening, no holds barred, wear the glad rags, something to remember, cost really no object?

Only three places come instantly to mind: the Connaught, the Dorchester and Le Gavroche. At none of the three, in my view, is the food as good as at Chez Nico, in Battersea on the "wrong" side of the Thames, or at La Tante Claire in Cheisea. But both of them, despite such ravishing dishes as the crab and sole mousseline with Sauternes sauce at the former and the rabbit with basil and tarracon and morels at the latter, would have to be classified as comfortable rather than swank. Both are too crowded, for one thing. That will change if Nico Ladenis finds the new premises he is seeking in central London, and Pierre Koffmann of La Tante Claire succeeds in taking over the lease of the building next door. At the Connaught, Michel Bourdin, whose grandmother ran a brasserie in Paris, has had his flirtations in recent years with nouvelle cuisine, but the backbone of the menu remains as traditional as the frock coats of the captains. Edwardian favorites to match the mellow paneling - Irish stew, steak and kidney pie, bread and butter pudding coexist happily with elaborate dishes from the classical French repertory such as the game Chartreuse. In less attentive hands. these things can quickly become routine and even drab, but not here. Bourdin has even managed to persuade the affluent patrons of his regal establishment to order some newer, lighter dishes such as his rendezvous de pétheur, a marriage of the best fish that Billingsgate Market has to offer on any given

The grace of Jean-Pierre Chevallier, who nanages the restaurant, the sage advice of the sommeliers (delivered in vaguely Hapsburg accents), the names of favored customers of yesteryear still clinging to dishes they favored (oysters Christian Dior, consomme Cole Porter), the elegant dress of one's fellow all of these elements help create a mood of discreet richness that is unmatched in London. (16 Carlos Place W1, tel: 499-7070; MasterCard: about £100, or $115, for two, including tip, tax and a modest bottle of wine. But the cost here, as in other restaurants mentioned, will be much higher if you order classic vintages, as you may be tempted to do.) Mossiman is up to something completely different in the Terrace Restaurant of the Dorchester. If the Connaught is Old Money. even when the accents at some tables owe more to Houston than to Eton, the Terrace is New. At a cost that must have run to around a million dollars, the Dorchester hired Albert Pinto to create a Chinese-modern-romantic decor with a dance floor. Mossiman has developed dishes of inspired simplicity such as sole gratinée à l'huile aux herbes and medaillons d'agneau aux fleurs de thym. Re-cently he has been experimenting with what he calls cuisine naturelle, using a minimum of sugar, butter and cream. As an example of pure finesse, it would be hard to match his perfectly peached chicken breast, served with four or five raw vegetables, cut into matchsticks and marinated in lime juice or necessary to leave the choice of wines to the waiter, and on two occasions, even though I had specified that I would like modest ones, I have been served punishingly expensive friends, so state your wishes firmly. Another problem here is inconsistency; the whisper in the trade is that Mossiman is peerless as a cook (and, indeed, as a teacher of other cooks), but that he has his problems in managing a brigade of the size needed to serve not only the Terrace and the excellent Dorchester Grill, which specializes in modernized English fare, but also room service and the private dining rooms. (Park Lane W1, tel: 629-8888; closed Sunday; American Express, Diners, Visa, Mastercard; about £80

Le Cavroche is the showplace of the most successful chain of haute cuisine restaurants in the world — that of the Roux brothers, who own or hold part interest in five other establishments in London, most of them festooned with awards, as well as two in the British countryside, one in northern France and one in California. Former cooks in aristocratic private houses, Albert and Michel Roux are technical geniuses; Albert, who presides at Le Gavroche, starts the careers of his young apprentices by painstakingly teaching them how to fry an egg.

Michelin gives Le Gavroche three stars, an accolade awarded to only one other British restaurant: the Roux brothers' own Waterside Inn at Bray, near Heathrow Airport, where Michel presides. While I think that two would be closer to the mark — Le Gavroche is simply not as good as Girardet in Switzerland or Jamin and Troisgros in France - this is without doubt the London restaurant for classic French cooking and Roux makes very, very few mistakes in the kitchen, and the staff in the clublike diningroom responds with appropriate pomp and panache. Among the dishes that linger in my memory are a salad of lobster and wild mushrooms, a woodcock of a quality equal to those served two decades ago at Lucas-Carton in Paris, a braid of red mullet and John Dory, the two fishes served with a chive sauce and an anise-flavored soufflé Suissesse. The cheeses, sent from Boulogne by Philippe Olivier and ripened in the restaurant's larder, are the best in the city.

Two minor grumbles: the style verges upon excessive richness, and the wine prices are truly terrifying (some bottles at more than £700). (43 Upper Brook Street, W1, tel: 408-0881, closed Saturday, Sunday, major holidays and a week at Christmas; American Express, Diners, Visa, MasterCard; about £120 for two).

N addition to Chez Nico (129 Queenstown Road, London SW8, tel: 7204: 6960; Visa; about £70 for two) and Law Tante Claire (68 Royal Hospital Road, SW3. tel: 352-6045; American Express, Diners, about £100 for two), there are a few other contenders that, for one reason or another, I'. have excluded from my very short list of London's best posh places. Here are brief' notes on a half-dozen of them:

Bombay Brasserie (140 Gloucester Rost SW7, tel: 370-4040; American Express, Diaers. Visa. MasterCard: about £40 for two)-This airy restaurant with languidly turning overhead fans and wicker chairs, owned by: the Taj Hotel chain of India, proves once again that that eating ethnic can be a luxuri-ous experience. The leafy, glass-walled conservatory (ask for a table there when you! reserve) is an especially evocative environ? ment in which to savor the subtlety of the work of the chef, Sandip Chaterjee; try, for example, his sautéed crab Malabar with grated coconut, or the fish (pomfret or gray mullet) with fenugreek. The menu includes seafood in the Goan style, spicy Tandoon specialties. Parsee dishes and vegetarian items from Gujarat.

Capital Hotel (22 Basil Street SW3, tel-589-5171; American Express, Diners, Visa; MasterCard; about £70 for two). David Lev. in, one of the most skilled of Britain's vounger hoteliers, redid his dining room not long ago, discarding the Banhaus fittings and substituting striped curtains and Louis XIV chairs. The cooking of Brian Turner remains as it was - rich and refined, with perhaps a trifle too much imagination on occasion. His' piccata of beef with capers, a marquise of white chocolate and various lish dishes show a sure hand that is also evident in the steaks; especially the côte de boeuf, from his charcoal grill. There is an agreeable lack of stuffness about the place, which probably has some thing to do with the outgoing personality of Turper, a Yorkshireman whose father ran a" fish-and-chip shop. Chelsea Room (in the Hyatt Carlton Tow-er Hotel, 2 Cadogan Place, SWI, tel: 235-5411; American Express, Diners', Visa, Miss terCard; about £100 for two). Bernard Gaume, the chef, and Jean Quero, the manager, have slowly and without fanfare built this into a restaurant of suprising quality for a chain hotel. The rather chilly room has recently been made more intimate and redecorated in pastel tones, and Gaume remains a wizard with fish (warm oysters with three sauces, turbot and lobster with cucumbers). Some of the other dishes are less brilliant, to my taste, which is why the Chelsea Room just misses my main list. Rue St. Jacques (5 Charlotte Street, WI, tel: 637-0222; closed Saturday lunch and Sunday: American Express, Diners, Visa; MasterCard, about £70 for two). Too small, really, to fit into the grand hore category, this new restaurant is nonetheless an elegant setting (huge mirrors, pillow-strewn banquettes) in which to sample the cuisine of Günther Schlender, the German chef. He has the ability to achieve depth of flavor without heaviness; witness his fabulous venison consommé and his ethereal lobster mousse flavored with old Armagnac. Vincent Calcerano, the Belgian maître d'hôtel, is an old pro. Scott's (20 Mount Street W1, tel: 629-5248; closed Sunday lunch and major holi-, days; American Express, Diners, Visa, MasterCard; about £50 for two). Suppose you are in a festive mood, but not too hungry? Make for Scott's - not the respectable but unexciting main restaurant but the adjacent oyster bar. A glass or two of champagne, some Colchesters or a few slices of irreproachable smoked salmon or a grilled sole, (or even a couple of spoonfuls of one of the half-dozen caviars on offer, in which case double the price estimate above) should, solve the problem quite nicely.

Wilton's (55 Jermyn Street, SW1, tel: 629-9955; closed Saturday, Sunday, major holidays and three weeks in July and August; American Express, Diners; about £80 for two). I know, I know: the cooking is nothing. to shout from the rooftops about, especially: in the more complex dishes, and the prices are ludicrously high for simple fare. But, Wilton's is the last genuinely Edwardian restaurant left in London, and I love it for its' Art Nouveau glass partitions (unchanged in the move from Bury Street), for its bossy waitresses in lab technicians' smocks, for its, oysters and soles and baby lobsters and roasted game birds, and above all for the indomitable, octogenarian Mrs. Marks, who once refused to give me a bill when my meal was terminated a few minutes early - there were a few tears of Calvados left in my glass - by a small fire in the kitchen.

British Rail Pioneers With a New Credit Card

by Roger Collis

ONDON - The cavernous Victorian headquarters of British Rail at Marylebone Station in London is about the last place you would ex-pect innovative marketing programs to be conceived. And yet BR's product develop-Ment team has broken new ground with its Travel Key charge card, which combines corporate discounts for travel services with frequent-user incentives for individual business travelers. It is significant because it attempts to reconcile the contentious issue of who should benefit from travel incentives. the company or the executive, by offering something to both.

Travel Key is aimed primarily at small- to medium-sized companies by attempting to match the kind of discounts on hotels, restaurants, car rentals and so on that are normally available only to large corporations. These, in turn, are attracted mainly by a first-ever discount on rail travel.

In the 18 months since it was launched in July 1983, 20,000 cards have been sold to more than 8,000 companies (10 percent of the total in the last two months). And with renewals running at 96 percent, it seems set the capture around 10 percent of the British exporate charge-card market (estimated at 300,000 cards) by the end of this year. (The market is now dominated by American Express, 60 percent; Diners Club, 20 percent and Visa/Barclaycard, 10 percent.)
According to Jeffrey Percival, the new product development manager at British Rail, 'We estimate that 10 percent of the £40 million [$45 million] going through Travel Key this year will be new business. This will mean a net contribution of about £2 million to £3 million at the bottom line."

This is not a bad achievement for a stuffy. state-owned railroad wallowing in red ink. British Rail expects Travel Key to contribute 10 percent of the £30 million additional revenues targeted for its Intercity (high-speed) service, one-third of which is currently business travel.

There is interest in the concept across the Channel. The Belgian railroad is considering whether to accept Travel Key and may even try to coordinate a similar type of discount card throughout the European rail network.

Exis would be a remarkable endeavor, given the conservatism of national railroads. It was only last June that the Belgians accepted charge cards, and then only for international travel. And the West German railroad, the DBB, has yet to do so.

According to Percival, British Rail has been approached by several of the smaller British airlines that would like to join Travel Key. Talks have been held with Dan-Air, he says, but they would first like to link up with a carrier the size of British Caledonian or British Airways.

Travel Key is available now only to com-panies and individuals trading as a corporate entity. It comes with two options: an "Authorized User" card costing £25 a year intended to be issued from a central stock within the company, and a "Named User" card costing £12.50 a year and £7.50 for six cards or more. Both types of card carry discounts on travel services, but only the Named User card entitles the holder to personal benefits that are clocked up on expenditure on rail travel.

Discounts include 5 percent on rail tickets p(the rate for Authorized User cards was reduced to 2.5 percent on Jan. 1), 15 percent on Godfrey Davis Europear rental, 10 per-cent on rooms at 190 hotels in Britain and 10 percent off in participating restaurants.

Named User cards also get a 15 percent discount on private health insurance and free personal accident insurance. There are also discounts on language-learning sids, of-fice equipment, translation and secretarial services and computer facilities. Cardholders are invoiced monthly. Invoices for Named Users can be sent either to the company or directly to the individual.

Personal incentives can be claimed as soon as one of the six expenditure "bands" is reached during the 12-month validity of the card. For example, a card holder who has spent £300 can either opt for a free first-class ticket for two to any mainland train station in Britain, or accumulate expenditure to the £1,400 level. This brings a free weekend break for two, with boat and hotel accommodation, in Amsterdam or Paris. There is also a £50 bonus given once a year toward a first-class return rail ticket to any destination in mainland Britsin.

Travel Key has had its share of hiccops. British Rail implicitly acknowledges that the Authorized User card was a mistake. They are playing it down in their promotion and would like to abandon it altogether. The reason is that a large number of companies —which tend to be hostile to personal incentives to executives — had simply bought one

BR combines discounts and user incentives

card and lodged it with their travel agent to get the 5 percent discount on rail travel. This has meant a loss for British Rail. which has been unable to persuade these companies to take out Named User cards. British Rail has compounded the problem by reducing the discount on Authorized User cards to 2.5 percent. The travel manager of one company said he would retaliate by buying one Named User card and using it for all members of his company. The Institute of Travel Managers in Britain (which is affiliated with the International Business Travel Association) is having a showdown with British Rail on Feb. 11 in London.

"We do not like frequent-user programs," says Peter Long, travel manager of Rowntree Macintosh Ltd. "There is a temptation for individual executives to make unnecessary journeys just to boost their total expenditure. This is something we don't need.

Kathryn Yates, travel manager of York-shire Imperial Alloys, another big firm, is also irate. "When British Rail introduced Travel Key, all our executives got information about it except me."

This highlights another problem. "There's nothing in Travel Key for us," complains a leading travel agent in London. "We feel that British Rail is undermining our client base by getting hold of individual executives' names and using Travel Key as a direct marketing tool." His view is held by several of his collections.

But this is precisely what British Rail has in mind. Although travel agents get their commission, they do not put a lot of effort into promoting travel by rail in Britain. Briten Kan Seems to de set company executive as a core loyalty group.

Percival reports there are plans to extend Travel Key's range of services (the first airport-style executive lounge is due to open at King's Cross station here this month) and expects hotel and car rental expenditure to be included in the incentive program although British tax authorities are making ominous noises.

An alternative strategy may be to promote Travel Key directly to individuals instead of to their companies. This would mean that executives could buy the card themselves and use it for company travel. This could raise a moral issue: whether or not to pass on the discount for rail travel to the company when submitting expense accounts.

Munich: Secret Capital of the Germans

by James M. Markham

UNICH — A dewy orange disk, the sun, was pasted in the sky over the white Nymphenburg Palace, which glowed in the snow like some Central European Taj Mahal. Out on the bumpy ice of the canal old men hunched over their curling stones — with long straight handles adorned with colwith long straight handles adorned with col-ored tassels to distinguish the teams — grunting and calling out in the choppy Ba-varian idiom as the opposing stones clacked off one another, spinning into the snow-hanks. In the middle distance — the scene seemed an updated version of a Brueghel oil that might hang in Munich's Alte Pina-kothek — children scampered about with bockey sticks, chattering merely (In a kothek — children scampered about with hockey sticks, chattering merrily. On a stretch of shoveled ice unto herself, a sleek woman in a big hat was trying to get the hang of a new-looking pair of skates (or was it skating itself?), making cautious, mincing steps; the seat of her leather pants was dusted with snow, hinting at setbacks in this mobility anterprise.

It was a winter snapshot of Munich, one that has been taken before and one that will be taken again. It was an image of enjoyment, of pleasure in recurring ritual, which is maybe the secret charm of the city called the secret capital of Germany, the city that large numbers of Germans admit regularly in opinion polls is the most sympathetic to them and the one where they would like to live if they didn't live at home. For Munich is a paradox, at once the most prosperous, goahead city in West Germany and the most hedonistic — not crassly sybaritic in the manner of the antiseptic sex strips that have brought notoriety to quarters of Hamburg or Frankfurt, but gently, with tradition, panache and class. A Munich gentleman relates that an outsider once asked him the purpose of his men's social club, founded in 1858. "None at all," he answered, mock somber. The spirit is called "Liberalitas Bavarica." A lay translation: "Live and let live."

When non-Rayarian Germans come here

When non-Bavarian Germans come here, it is with the aim of relaxing as they perhaps never do in Bielefeld, not growing agitated if they are late for appointments or if some-body gets their title (Herr Doktor, Herr Professor, Herr Oberregierungsdirektor) askew. Horst Vetten, a Düsseldorf-born writer transplanted to Bavaria, sums up the change: "It is completely 'out' not to have time. The midlife crisis has been out for a long time. Stress is no longer a status symbol. The new status symbol: One has time."

Americans, too, have discovered the city's take-it-easy allure, and long ago converted the boisterous beer-swilling Oktoberfest, or at least corners of it, into a Yankified event. The besotted American in lederbosen is a fond autumn cliché.

"The image of Munich in America," says a tourist official with a frown, "is linked to beer and Oktoberfest. The city fathers are not too happy about this beer image." The city fathers are, however, plenty happy that strong-dollar Americans are the single largest contingent of foreign visitors.

Asked to explain their singularity, the Bavarians tell you that they are really Celts, or Celto-Romans, a jollier and more anarchic lot than the Germanic tribes who picked up some of the northern pieces of the fallen Roman Empire. "Sharp-eyed essayists, if not straitlaced historians, have always seen the Benno Hubensteiner, a professor at Munich's stately university. As Celtic traits he cites "fancifulness, the joy in rich forms, the joy of going one better, of quarreling and brawling, the weakness for noble horses."

As Luther's Reformation swept over Germany, the doughty duchy of Bavaria stood firm in its Catholic faith, and its durable Wittelsbach dynasty went on, with help from Italian craftsmen, to turn its little capital, Munich, into a Baroque masterpiece. The historian Jacob Burckhardt pronounced the sumptuous gardens and theater of the Nymphenburg Palace "the most splendid Rococo to be found on earth, and superior in invention and elegance to the state rooms of is still regarded by local patriots with the same sense of betrayal and loss that some Alabamans muster for the defeat of the Confederacy. In the 19th century Munich lost out to Berlin, and to this day outsiders are deprecatingly called "Prussians," fast-talking city slickers who think they can pull fast ones on the native bumpkins. A lingering feeling of inferiority hides behind Bavarian resentments of "northerners," and some trace it to an inculcated shame about the vowel-gulping Bavarian dialect, which young Bavarians are taught in school to consider lowlier than High German, Helmut Dotterweich, a courtly Munich author, recounts how at the end of the war a barefoot northern German refugee appeared at a Bavarian village. "She was much poorer than all the farmers, but she immediately achieved status because she could talk so fast and in High German," he says.

HE magic of Munich is that, while becoming utterly cosmopolitan, it has not yanked up its rustic roots. It remains a small town, where the Viktualien-markt, the hish green vegetable and herb market, is a living thing, not sustained artifi-cally as amusing folklore. "When the women of the Viktualienmarkt dance at carnival," remarks Mayor Georg Kronawitter, "they do it because they like to, not because they are paid to do so by city hall. They really like Viktualienmarkt who are dancing." The sartorial elegance of the city - the long-limbed women in their sloping hats and long capes, the men in their loden coats and broadbrimmed fedoras - bespeaks, too, the taste of a horsy gentry.

"Munich has never really become a big city," says August Everding, a "Prussian" who for two decades has infused his ebullient spirit into the city's opera and theater. "It does not have the uncharm of the big city - and yet in the arts only New York overtakes it. And the folklore here does not slide so quickly into kitsch, because it is indigenous. Folklore was not discovered in order to draw tourists to Munich."

The Bavarians are nostalgically fond of the Wittelsbach dynasty, which held its king-dom together for seven centuries, so after the monarchy was deposed in 1918 in favor of a republican form of government they drew up some regulations to make sure the former royal family would not tumble altogether from the style to which it had become accus-tomed. Wittelsbach privileges include a free box at the magnificent opera — "and it's never empty," says Everding — and the right to throw parties and receptions at Nymphenburg and other former royal palaces.

These are the peaks of Munich's highly eclectic social season. Prince Franz of Bavar-ia presides over some of these occasions, where he is unblushingly addressed as Royal Highness. (Only the republican-minded Social Democrats boycott these events, though many confess they would love to come if it wouldn't get them in trouble with the party.) There is, however, nothing archaic about the prince, a quick-eyed art collector who spends a good deal of his time in New York, where he is chairman of the Museum of Modern Art's International Council of patrons.

Most of the Wittelsbachs cleave to an aristocratic low profile in Munich, but a few have broken splashily into the private sector
—like Prince Luitpold, who sells his Royal Bavarian Beer in England. Other uprooted mobility from Eastern Europe cultivate a more conspicuous social life among Munich's fast-moving "Schickeria" - the "peo-ple" section of the tabloid Abendzeitung breathlessly follows their doings in the city's salons and restaurants and on the ski slopes of St. Moritz.

A republican, though, is the real king of the Free State of Bavaria. Franz Josef Strauss, Bavaria's curmudgeonly ministerpresident, incarnates the "national" character: gruff, witty, sly, quick to anger, prone to verbal explosions (with no follow-through), suspicious of outsiders — in short, what the people of Munich call a Grantler.

'The Grantler," Strauss once explained, "is really the expression of the Ur-Münchener, but he can easily convert himself into a warm conversation partner when he meets with an open, heartfelt attitude." Strauss standard posture is that of the outraged Bavarian farmer who can't believe what foolishness is going on in Bonn — and who would love to go up there and fix it but has too much to do down on the farm.

But Munich's civic fairy tale has a dirty little secret - a rarely acknowledged debt to Berlin and all those frightful, upright "Prussians." The scope of Munich's postwar boom would not have been thinkable without the isolation of West Berlin, girdled by divisions of Soviet troops, and the displacement of hundreds of thousands of eastern Germans to Bavaria. If Munich is now the publishing capital of West Germany, it is because of Berlin's decline and the falling of Leipzig to the Red Army; if Siemens, Osram, Allianz have their headquarters here it is because their industrial captains pulled them out of Berlin. The same is true of the film industry, which moved from the Reich capital to the secret capital after the war. Munich's university, too, is top-heavy with Prussian professors. The city's star soccer club. F.C.

Among some old Munich families - the ones who root for the second-division soccer club 1860 München because it has deeper fashionable to bemoan the de-Bavarianizing of the city. "One always has the feeling that we are being so Prussianized," says Helmut Dotterweich, the author, musing that per-haps the true, undiluted Bavarian spirit can only be found down in Salzburg or in the South Tirol, where they talk funny, too. (A mourning of bygone ways is an old tradition. At the end of World War II, Karl Valentin, a Munich cabaret comedian, was wandering among the ruins of the city's shattered victory arch. "Hasn't been much in use lately, has it?" he muttered. But creative talent has always lived in roots than flashy, upstart F.C. Bayern -it is some tension with its charming, bourgeois Munich environment. In this century, Mu-nich's most renowned native novelist, Lion Feuchtwanger, is a dead prophet without honor in the city. His 1930 classic, "Success," is a bitter parody of Munich's smalltown mores. He died in Los Angeles in 1958.

In panegyric writing on the city, it is customary to cite the glowing testimonials of Thomas Mann, who loved Munich. But by 1926 Mann sensed another, meaner spirit welling up in his adopted town and, in a little-remembered and rarely quoted speech, denounced the poisoning of its tolerance by anti-Semitic nationalism and God knows what sinister stupidities."

UNICH, Mann said, had been transformed into Germany's "bastion of reaction" and had become "a stupid, the truly stupid city." Jürgen Kolbe, an uprooted Saxon and Munich's culture minister, likes to evoke this bitter Mann oration to warn the citizenry against smugness. "The biggest danger in Munich is the prevailing self-satisfaction with the good and agreeable situation here," says Kolbe.

For some, a monument to these dangers is the mammoth, red-brick, almost-finished Gasteig, a multipurpose cultural center that the city has built above the banks of the Isar River. Conceived as a kind of Lincoln-Pompidou center that would make the world notice Munich's cultural pre-eminence in West Germany, the Gasteig is just nearing completion; its main function will be to provide a badly needed concert hall, but making the whole thing a living institution will be a challenge. Some culture critics worry that Munich already has a surplus of "hardware" — 20,000 high culture seats must be filled every night — and not enough "software," that is, creative energy going into new plays and new ideas. It is hard to be troubled by such considerations, shall we say, on a summer day jog-ging through the English Garden, which tends to be dotted with naked sun bathers and families swaying along with their baby carriages. Or sitting in Schumann's having a beer with bright young movie people out to conquer the world. Or savoring a meal at Aubergine, maybe the best restaurant in Germany. Or being swept up in a 40-minute ovation for Pavarotti at the opera. Liberalitas Bavarica. Live and let live. Most cities would be overjoyed to be burdened with what Munich construes as problems.

is at least one indispensable piece of evidence in the show. This is the famous tapes-try, made from a design by Charles Lebrun, that shows Louis XIV making a formal visit to the Gobelins factory not long after it had been reorganized. Needless to say, the best possible face is put upon the multifarious activity that was going on, and we sense that the king was really looking each piece over, not just going through the motions.

Yet, it has to be said that in the exhibition itself we do not get to see much of what went on, either at the Gobelins or elsewhere, as a result of the king's policies. Even if we allow that much of the silver was melted down at a later stage in his reign to beef up the exchequer, it remains true that in the decorative arts, as in painting, this is not a very distinguished exhibition. Nor is it an especially rational one, if we consider the place accorded to Rouen faience, which Louis XIV never showed any signs of liking especially, as against the dearth of grander objects.

against the dearth or grander objects.

Altogether "The Sun King" reminds us that an exhibition of ideas is altogether a tricky undertaking. It calls not only for the exercise of a sustained and luminous intelligence but for a total generosity on the part of essential lenders. Who would have forder adventure results. Who would have forlorn adventure results. Who would have foreseen, for example, that one of the most rewarding exhibits in "The Sun King" would be a little painting by an unidentified artist of a Parisian playing-card factory? Great art it is not, but it has precisely the immediacy, the sense of something seen clearly and set down well, that is lacking from so much else

A Council in Abeyance

President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers is teetering on one leg. Mr. Reagan, who is contemptuous of economists, has failed to fill two vacancies. The council that issued its annual report on Tuesday has only one member left. Whose views does it represent? If Mr. Reagan means to have a council, as he says he does, then why the delay in having one?

The report, appended to a briefer statement by the president, was signed by two members, William Niskanen and William Poole. But that was two weeks ago, the day before Mr. Poole left office. Predictably, the report justifies the spectrum of administration policies. It deals inconclusively with sticky problems like the foreign trade deficit and the high value of the dollar. That is understandable. But the report and the presidential statement also wander into mysterious territory on two subjects, the Federal Reserve Board and the elderly.

On the Fed, the presidential statement, backed by a lecture in the companion report, complains about monetary tightness in the 1981-82 recession and again last summer. It asserts that the administration will "cooperate closely" with the Fed in defining and carrying out monetary policy. That is the broadest hint yet that it wants to invade the Fed's statutory independence. The threat is unwarranted, coming from a president who will be remembered for mismanaging fiscal policy and thus greatly complicating the Fed's operations.

On the elderly, the council undercuts a tenet of the new budget: that Social Security is untouchable. In a special chapter the council says the elderly are no longer a "relatively disadvantaged group." The incomes of elderly families are about equal to those of younger families, it says, and the poverty rate among the elderly is lower than in the population. A clear implication is that a one-year freeze in Social Security cost-of-living increases is not as unthinkable as Mr. Reagan maintains. A president serious about tough budget cuts should have proposed this one.

Is the administration serious about any of this? Last fall Mr. Reagan thought of abolish-ing the council, probably because of the advice it kept pressing on him: Take the budget deficit seriously; recognize that taxes may have to be raised. Martin Feldstein, then chairman, contributed to national awareness by taking his case to the public. That offended a White House engrossed in the re-election cam-paign. But in the end the president decided to keep the council. At a time when record budget and trade deficits pose huge threats to the economy, that is surely the right decision. When will Mr. Reagan act on it?

Time for Farm Reform

It comes packaged as a way to reduce federal spending, but it is really an overdue proposal to reduce the unproductive role of govern-ment in America's most productive industry: agriculture. The cuts in farm subsidies that President Reagan seeks would save an estimated $16 billion over three years. More important in the long run, they would create a more profitable, more competitive farm industry ca-pable of feeding the world at lower prices.

If America's agriculture is so productive, why are so many of its farmers burting badly? Here are several reasons:

Trade distortions. Corn, soybean and wheat farmers depend heavily on sales abroad. But the dollar's high exchange rate has made their products about a third more expensive since 1980 and given a big edge to efficient competi-tors in Canada, Brazil, Argentina and Australia. Making matters worse are the heavy goverament subsidies to inefficient farmers in Europe, which create surpluses on a continent that should be a major food importer.

Swollen debts and high interest rates. Many farmers borrowed billions to buy land at inflated prices in the 1970s, when crop failures created world food shortages. Therefore many farms that generate a healthy cash flow even at currently depressed world prices are unable to cover their monthly mortgage payments.

Hidden inefficiencies. The 300,000 large, mechanized farms that yield about 70 percent of America's farm output are models of efficiency. But the two million farms producing the other 30 percent are too small to stay affoat without help. Even with government subsidies, these farms taken together yield no net income. Some have become vacation homes for the rich; most are the homesteads of poor people who must earn their living elsewhere. America's traditional farm programs, designed to support a minimum price for farm products, help deeply indebted farmers meet their monthly bills. But overall the aid does more harm than good. The supports set minimum prices for exports: no farmer would sell abroad for a lower price than at home. But at current, inflated dollar exchange rates, the price support level is well above the cost of producing the same crops abroad. As a result, other countries have put more land into cultivation, reducing America's share in world markets and making American farmers ever more dependent on government help.

The only argument for price supports is that they let struggling small farms stay in business. But why should the majority of Americans pay billions to support a minority's 19th-century vision of the pastoral life? Even if that were a sound objective, the current programs are hardly the way to achieve it. Since price support subsidies are distributed in proportion to output, only a small fraction of the money ever reaches small farmers. In his first term President Reagan behaved like his predecessors, preaching free enterprise in Washington but playing sugar daddy on the north forty. His response to a collapse in world food prices in the early 1980s was to protect farmers with a $19 billion subsidy in 1983, the costliest support program in history.

Now the administration proposes to retreat from those subsidies over a period of several years, eventually leaving supports that would be only a temporary cushion against the most precipitous decline in farm prices. And, equalimportant, it would limit the amount of subsidy going to any single farmer.

A year ago such a reform seemed politically unthinkable. It may still be, But if serious reform is ever to occur, the time is now. Farm subsidies plainly are not working as intended. Even farmers are beginning to see that.

recently, David Osselton debunked the notion "widely believed, even among scientists and mathematicians" — that if enough monkeys were set to tapping away at enough typewriters, they would in time produce all the works of Shakespeare. Mr. Osselton says the num-bers involved would be so stupendous that the planet probably could not generate enough energy for the animals to accomplish this deed. In fact just such an endeavor has been attempted. "The Shakespeare Project," as it was known, was quietly set in motion in the early 1950s under the terms of a bequest made by an eccentric billionaire. Some 40,000 rhesus monkeys were put to work banging away on Remington portables in a converted aircraft hangar in southern California

The project proceeded as expected for a time, and by 1957 the monkeys had produced entire acts from "Henry IV, Part 2" and "Julius Caesar," as well as a scene from "The Two Gentlemen of Verona." Then one day a human attendant excitedly yanked from one of the typewriters a sheet of paper on which a monkey had typed a single line — "Sha bop sha bop sha bang alang ding dong" — and took it to a recording studio, where it was incorporat-

Writing in the British weekly New Scientist ed into a popular song that sold 2 million records. The next day there was a bunch of bananas next to every typewriter. So began a steady flow of "shoowop shoowops," wahs" and similar expressions accounting for about 15 percent of the lyrics in what are now considered seminal works in rock music.

Since then the monkeys have not produced another line of Shakespeare, but there have poured forth with statistical inevitability dozens of scripts for movies, situation comedies and television dramas filled with treachery, lust and greed that have enthralled millions of viewers; romantic novels; scenarios for rock videos; the text of a $95 coffee-table book on the Flemish masters; a financial newsletter; a successful syndicated column; and, you may by now suspect, an editorial or two.

Mr. Osselton is right when he says, "Obviously ... there is no earthly chance of generating a literary work by any such random process." But a work does not have to be literary to put bananas on the table.

Mr. Osselton is also right when he concludes that monkeys certainly could not produce all of Shakespeare's works. But then neither could Shakespeare, in this market.

The car ran smoothly from 59th to 125th street, climbing several steep grades. After the test, Mr. Lynch, manager of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, observed: "The problem of the storage battery is solved, though several minor improvements are necessary." The battery will be subjected to every test, in all kinds of weather, and against all difficulties in the course of the next month. If these prove satisfactory, batteries will be installed in the crosstown tramway cars, which - strange relics of the past - are drawn by horses and are the object of ridicule by visitors to the metropolis.

1935: Hope for Russo-American Ties WASHINGTON -The present Russo-American tension is merely a passing phase which will be followed by a more realistic attitude and an eventual solution of the differences, in the opinion of neutral diplomatic observers. The basic difficulty, apparently, was the recent attempt to solve simultaneously the financial and commercial problems, whereas the broad trend of Russo-American relations will probably resemble the long and complex Russo-British and Russo-French negotiations. The current stagnation contrasts with the roseate early expectations that hundreds of millions of dollars in trade would automatically follow recognition of Russia. Watching as a South Korean Democrat Goes Home

WASHINGTON — From time to time an individual steps forward and, risking life and fate, rivets our attention on the idea of democracy. Kim Dae Jung, the brilliant and charismatic South Korean leader, has performed that task in the past and is in the process of doing it again.

A year ago Mr. Kim announced his intention to end his exile in the United States by returning to South Korea. Because President Chun Doo Hwan and his murdered predecessor both made efforts to end Mr. Kim's political career by ending his life, Mr. Kim's announcement provoked a long, public, international discussion. The discourse has reached the moment of denouement: On Wednesday Mr. Kim began his journey home. What will become of him? He is a democrat. He believes that his country will not be strong or stable until its citizens are relieved of government repression and are able to choose their own leaders. Through his oratory and political skills he is able to energize people, evoke the vision of a free society, outline a program for the future.

Mr. Chun, using a two-track approach, is trying to persuade the world that he has already fulfilled those goals. At home he has stifled dissent, created two "opposition" parties that take orders from the government and barred the strongest politicians from any political activity. Internationally he will soon be paying a return state visit to America to By Patt Derian get the American flag of approval wrapped around himself again. He is also hosting the Asian summer games and the next Summer Olympics, and he hopes to begin discussions with North Korea.

With all that as background, Mr. Chun wanted Mr. Kim to stay away. And there is a recent ominous precedent for concern. Dictatorships are not fastidious when it comes to dealing with democratic rivals. The last time that was demonstrated, Benigno S. Aquino Jr. was seen lying in his own blood, shot in the back of the head minutes after his arrival at Manila airport in the Philippines.

Mr. Kim puts democracy's question: What is to be done, and by whom, to avoid another major disaster for democracy?

There is a companion question that he does not ask: What is to be done, and by whom, to prevent another disaster for Mr. Kim?

Locked up at home or in prison, he would be, in a way, quite similar to Mr. Aquino dead on the tarmac: Both countries' citizens would be deprived of their strength, skills and leadership.

Democracy does not need another martyr. At the 11th hour the White House bestirred itself. It is said to have obtained assurances that Mr. Kim would be neither killed nor jailed — at least not before Mr. Chun meets Mr. Reagan. The plan seems to be to put him on ice by keeping him under house arrest and forbidding political activity. Until Washington speaks with clarity and conviction about its intention that Mr. Kim should live in the same safety and freedom in his home country as he did in the United States, both are in serious question. And in a situation such as this, American silence is read as assent.

South Korea's government could, and may, make all the conjecture and concern about Mr. Kim's future disappear in an instant by issuing a public statement that he returns without any threat to his liberty and is expected to resume his activities in the life of his country.

But Mr. Kim is in jeopardy because his government seems to be in disarray. Washington speaks obliquely for it; it does not speak for itself, and is unable to end the criticism implicit in every discussion of the possibilities. There is menace in weakness and indecision. The upshot is that Kim Dae Jung stands bravely for his principles at the edge of the abyss. And democracy stands - for what?

The writer, who served as assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs during the Carter administration, is accompanying Kim Dae Jung on his return to South Korea. She contributed this comment to the Los Angeles Times.

WASHINGTON - From the first there has been cheap political profit in the ongoing argument about the settlement at the Yalia conference (Feb. 4-11, 1945) and it may be too much to hope that after 40 years Yalta the myth might be separated from Yalta the history lesson.

rated from Yaita the history lesson, Still, we ought to try.

As a political myth, Yalta,—the last of World War II's three major meetings between Roosevelt. Churchill and Stalin — powerfully appointed the "betrayal" of Eastern Entertainty and Stalin — powerfully appointed the "betrayal" of Eastern Entertainty and Eas rope to Soviet vassalage. So viewed it makes blunderers if not criminals of Roosevelt and Churchill, a view as unhistorical as it is mean-minded Certainly it was a sad irony that a war begun in 1939 over the fate of Poland (although having far larger and deeper causes) should end with the delivery of Poland from Hitler's ivranny to Stalin's.

Such was the tragedy that Churchill in the last volume of his war memoirs, coupled with the allied triumph. But "tragedy" implies, correctly in this instance, an intractable fate as well as human misjudgment. At the outset of the conference in Crimea in that long-ago February, Europe was not a lump of clay ready for molding: it was a chaos — a "charnel house," as Churchill lag-said — of fleeing refugees, manual armies and disintegrating societies.

In that ruined setting a stricter insistence on binding guarantees of democracy in Poland and elsewhere was of course entirely possible, but possibly idle as well. Stalin's armies already occupied Poland, and it was remarkable in the circumstances that Roosevelt and Churchill expressed as much concern as they did about the future freedom of Eastern Europe. In: an important article in Foreign Affairs. Zbigniew Brzezinski observes that, in fact, their solicitude for such freedom was stronger at Yalta than it had been some 15 months earlier at the Tehran conference.

The missing factor, all but ignored even by Mr. Brzezinski, was the overriding preoccupation with the war in the Pacific. The Japanese war had been subordinated to the defeat of Hitler. Once that was accomplished, the Pacific war was expected to grievously expensive, in blood and money. The Japanese did not part easily even with obscure Pacific atolls. It was almost beyond imagin-ing, although not beyond fearing, what produgies of bloodshed might be needed to achieve the "unconditional surrender" of the home islands.

If Roosevelt and Churchill were overwhelmingly concerned to procure Stalin's participation in that war, who now can blame them? They did not, and could not, foresee the role of the atomic bomb. The successful test at Alamogordo, New Menco. was still six months away.

Placing Yalta in that context may not excuse the miscalculations, if such they were, about Poland's future. But ims exercise in mere i does render it contemptible if not pointless to moralize about the outcome as if alternatives were obvious and to be easily seized.

What alternatives were there? Perhaps to revoke the unconditionals surrender" call, reaffirmed at Yalta? and seek a negotiated peace with lapan? That, after Pearl Harbor?

Or to send General George Pation bolting far beyond his supply base to Prague, or somewhere else in central Europe? That, after the near fiascoin the Ardennes? What would American opinion have said about sending Americans to do what it seemed Ressians were doing well enough, and at incalculable cost of life, and even then perhaps to settle down as occupation armies in places most Americans had never even heard of?

Poland, the main "victim" of Yalta, has suffered under certain intractable historical conditions ever since Russia and Germany became powerful, unified national states. The gifted and tragic Poles had the geographical misfortune to occupy the great plant through which invaders must passia either direction, and thus are fated for the foreseeable future always to be a subject of more than passing political interest in Moscow.

That it was within the power of Roosevelt and Churchill to toss aside all these sad conditions of history and circumstance is a fantastic theory. Besides, as Mr. Brzezinski argues, il ter 40 years it is less essential to debate how Yalta happened than to think how to begin to escape its dangerous legacy of European division. Something Fishy Is Going On in Pinochet's Chile ty leader: "The raids, torture, ar-

By Barbara Koeppel

N EW YORK — There is some-thing rotten in Chile. On Feb. 2 the country's military rulers renewed the state of siege that they had imposed in early November — the very day Ronald Reagan was re-elected. This time they cited "domestic commotion." Before, it was terrorists who were threatening the country's order and calm. Force.

be met with force. In a stroke, massive repression was unleashed. Troops swooped on slums in pre-dawn raids, hunting, they said, for criminals. Thousands of people were rounded up and hundreds were sent into internal exile. Political and human rights offices were ransacked and the press was silenced: Six of seven opposition publications that had become a forum for dissent and a key element in the national protests were instantly shut. Radio and even pro-government mainstream newspapers were muzzled, forbidden to print or to broadcast political news or anything that would "create alarm."

That terrorism and commotion exist is fact and few Chileans doubt it. When the anti-terrorist law was decreed last June, bombs were set off at power stations and outside banks in Santiago. Responsibility was claimed by a radical group, the army branch connected with the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front, that believes the general and his government must be overthrown by force and sabotage.

in a large number of cases, however, it is not too clear who are the said she would get it back soon. terrorists and who causes the comcases that occurred last year.

 In May a couple were picked up by police, beaten and tortured until unconscious. The husband awoke in front of an electrical tower just in time to see an ignited fuse. He dragged himself away but his wife was not so fortunate: The bomb exploded, killed her and heavily damaged the installation. Unaware that the husband had escaped, the authorities announced on television that a woman terrorist had died while placing explosives. Alerted by the husband, the Catholic Church's human rights office hid him, publicized the real story and arranged for him to leave Chile.

 In September a bomb exploded in a church in the southern city of Punta Arenas. Church people entered soon after the blast and found the body of a man whose identity cards revealed as a lieutenant in the CNI, Chile's intelligence unit. In October police forced a nurse midwife out of her car in Santiago and drove it away. Authorities to whom she complained commonplace, police deposit guns. ammunition and revolutionary literature in someone's home, usually in a slum. Next they call in the statecontrolled television crews to film the cache and announce that terrorists' arms were discovered and the guilty have been arrested.

And in a practice which is by now

Most Chileans now doubt that the bulk of such acts are the work of the groups the government calls terrorists. Moreover, observers say that the state of siege was invoked to thwart not terrorism but the increasingly organized and successful protests against General Pinochet's regime. "These, and not the terrorists, are the real threat to their control," said one radio broadcaster. Because repression is now ram-pant and sophisticated, dissent has been squelched. Says one communi-record. But until this week, when the United States abstained in a vote on an Inter-American Development Bank loan, it has continued approve aid in the World Bank, the IADB and the IMF. Since 1981, loans from the first two institutions totaled just under $1.6 billion. That is the stuff that General Pinochet's order and calm are made of.

California Is Proof: Activist Government Can Help

S ANTA BARBARA, California — The Easterner traveling in southern California thinks he begins to understand Ronald Reagan. This is gan respected it as governor. the natural setting for his ideas: the optimism, the dislike of government, the belief that deficits will go away and happiness flourish if only individuals are freed from the burdens of taxation and regulation.

Flying into Los Angeles, one sees the extraordinary imprint of man's economic ingenuity — the freeways and factories and housing tracts built up from nothing in a few years. Along the coast is a glistening display of private affluence. To the east, in the valley, thrive crops to feed a nation. The sun shines. But there is a wonderful irony in the glories of the Golden State. None of them would be as they are if it had not been for government action. California has great natural advantages, but perhaps more than any other state in the Union it has depended on public investment. Tax dollars have played a large part in building its physical and intellectual capital. The crops would not grow if the government had not spent billions on the greatest irrigation works in the memory of man. Two activist presidents who believed in government, Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt. pushed the cause of reclamation. Farmers in the Central Valley still benefit from subsidized water. The California freeways were not built by private enterprise. The explosive growth of Los Angeles and San Diego and their surrounding counties was made possible by that tax-paid transportation network. One of this state's great assets is the University of California, with its campuses ranging from urban Berke-ley to the tranquillity of the water's Silicon Valley and other high-tech centers are dependent on the quality of education provided by the public system.

Public recreational facilities are another outstanding feature of California: state and national parks, miles of public beaches. Tax money maintains manicured roadsides. State regulation has preserved much visual beauty. Professor Page Smith of the University of California at Santa Cruz, a leading historian of America. says strong governments have been ential to move the country ahead, but a period of reaction and trim-ming has always followed. Mr. Reagan is taking steps in his budget to remove encrustations. Liberals have to recognize that federal programs are not wise just because they have existed for years. But the Reagan budget is far more radical than that. Its premise really is that government spending is bad per se — domestic spending, that is. It closes its mind, and its heart, to the conditions of millions of Americans. their reliance on government for the infrastructure of existence and for their hope of upward mobility.

The budget dismisses federal support for mass transit, saying it "reduces local incentives to make sound economic choices." Only someone blithely ignorant of economic realities in New York and Chicago and Boston, and of the consequences of continued mass transit decay, could make such a statement. Only someone who knows nothing about the struggles of the middle class would think that a family earning more than $32,500 a year is too rich to need federal college loan assistance. Mr. Reagan's great strengths as a politician are the firmness of his beliefs and his geniality. Both depend on a degree of blindness to history and to human realities.

The Objective in Geneva

The case of Zbigniew Brzezinski, Robert Jastrow and Max Kampelman for the Strategic Defense Initiative (Jan. 28) is convincing - except that it makes the primary assumption that the Russians, given the opportunity, would strike against the United States with nuclear weapons. Any nuclear strike at whatever target would devastate large areas. Would the So-viet leaders risk U.S. retaliation? Can the world as we know it function if areas of the United States, and the Soviet Union are nuclear wastelands? The insanity of a nuclear war could not benefit the Russian people.

The major issue of our time is how

column "There Are Land Mines Under America's Big Banks" (Jan. 15) makes sound points about the weaknesses of the banking system but stops short of stating the specific ac-tion that would quickly restore banks to financial health: reducing or eliminating dividends to shareholders. In the Continental Illinois example that he cites, the board of directors had authorized, and the holding company had paid, the most recent quarterly dividend on its common stock when the run began, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation had to make a dividend prohibition a condition of the rescue package. Eliminating common dividends for a period would result in retained earnings for a bank, and if its asset base were held flat over the same period would reduce its leverage by the same percentage. Bank managers who complain that they cannot raise new capital because their holding companies' common-stock price is below book value have overlooked the most obvious way to raise equity capital: retention of earnings.

If bank managers are reluctant take such action (which would put pressure on the stock price), the Federal Reserve should make elimination of common dividends a condition of access to the discount window, or the FDIC should make it a condition of insurance of deposits.

Software Would 'Remember' Crisis in For Absent-Minded Users

By DAVID E. SANGER New York Times Service

EW YORK — Ask a human assistant to prepare a monthly sales report, and chances are he or she would use some common sense. The report would not be sent out until sales from all of the company's branch offices included, and calculations — commissions, inventory levels, and the like — are finished. And if the assistant values continued employment, copies of the completed report would be sent to the boss, the chairman of the board and the company president.

The term embraces a whole range of "expert systems" that try to encode the technical knowledge of doctors or engineers in a computer program to "natural language interfaces" that make it possible for computer users to give instructions to computers in plain English — or plain French. Some are useful and some are experimental, but all try to mimic the human reasoning processes. Not surprisingly, most artificial intelligence efforts have been limited to the university laboratory, using huge mainframes. But as personal computer users have become increasingly frustrated, with the unwieldy nature of spreadsheets and data bases, software houses have begun to look for ways to make programs mold themselves to the habits of users.

MONG the first was Microrim Corp., which last year began marketing a personal computer program called Clout that added natural language features to a data base program, which keeps complex lists. If a data base consists of a listing of the nation's 500 largest companies, with financial data for each, a user of Clout could type the command: "Rank the top 10 industries by average growth and earnings per share."

The program would then begin to parse the sentence, looking in its dictionary to discover that "rank" means "list in order" and that the term "average" connotes a specific mathematical calculation. Then it would sort each company by industry, determine the average growth and earnings per share for those industries, and produce the requested list.

"It's just one application of the technique," said Wayne J. Erickson, Microrim's chairman, who says that Clout has sold "in the tens of thousands" of copies since it was introduced 10 months ago.

But critics note that plain-English commands, while less intimidating than computer shorthand, produce a sugar-coated program. The underlying software is unchanged; if the user forgets to issue a command, or does not ask the right question, the program will be easily led astray. Thus, the task now is to develop (Continued on Page 11, Col. 1)

Pöhl Sees U.S. Debt

Dollar Strength, Deficit Blamed

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

DAVOS, Switzerland - Karl Otto Pöhl, head of West Germany's central bank, said Thursday that the United States faced a self-perpetuating crisis in its external finances unless the dollar falls soon to reduce the huge U. S. trade and current-account deficits.

Because the high dollar attracts imports and makes U. S. goods expensive to sell overseas, the United States faces a record deficit of about $130 billion on its external payments this year, compared with $100 billion in 1984, Mr. Pohl said.

Mr. Pöhl, the president of the Bundesbank, said the United States would probably have no difficulty financing an external deficit of this size for a few more years by drawing in savings from the rest of the world, though it would need to keep interest rates high to do so.

But he said the result would be a vast increase in the United States's foreign debt and in the interest payments that the United States ill have to make to foreign holders

"The United States could become a permanent deficit country because of its growing debt-service burden," he said at the annual business symposium organized by the European Management Forum, a Geneva-based business advisory group. "The United States might need to run a trade surplus of $30 billion to $40 billion a year just to pay interest on its debt."

Shortly before Mr. Pöhl gave his warning, the deputy U. S. Treasury secretary, Robert T. McNamar, predicted that the dollar would remain strong even if Congress cut the federal budget deficit this year and allowed interest rates to fall.

Mr. McNamar argued that the dollar was being kept high not by U.S. interest rates and the budget deficit but by a movement to invest in the United States that can only strengthen if the Reagan administration reduces the delicit.

The Saudi Petrochemical Boom

Riyadh Moves To Ease Fears Of Global Glut

By Daniel F. Cuff New York Times Service
NEW YORK — The natural gas that Saudi Arabians once wastefully flared off as a byproduct of oil production now is being harnessed and turned into petrochemicals. The Saudi dream of industrialization is coming true.

But some analysts are suggesting that the dream may turn into a nightmare for petrochemical producers elsewhere — with Dow Chemical Co., Union Car-bide Corp., Du Pont Co. and the European and Japanese chemi-cal giants all feeling the effects. In picture-book communities and gleaming plant complexes that did not exist five years ago, Saudi Arabia this year is starting up much of its output of products with such names as ethanol, methanol, polyethylene and polyvinyl chloride, Petrochemical products, made from oil as well as natural gas, end up as plastics and fibers in thousands of industrial and con-sumer uses, from clothing to antifreeze to plastic bags. New plants in Saudi Arabia, as well as in Mexico, Kuwait and Canada are adding some 10 percent to world capacity. As a result, fears are being expressed that many existing petrochemical plants will not be around in five years as the extra output depresses prices. The Saudis, keenly aware of these fears, are trying to assuage them even before production starts in full. They are dispatch-ing representatives and hiring public relations experts to get their message out. One Saudi official, Abdul Aziz al-Jarbou, said: "Our intent is to engage in commerce in a professional and an orderly, not disruptive, manner to compete fairly, to cooperate and to realize profits for our effort."

The Saudis stress that they are developing their petrochemical industry on a 50-50 ownership basis with such companies as Colanese Corp., Exxon Corp., Mo-bil Corp., Shell Chemical Co. and Texas Eastern Corp., as well as with Japanese and other international companies. And they contend that at full capacity they will be adding only 5 percent to world petrochemical output. But many Western analysts remain wary.

"There's the ancient tale about the camel out in the cold who put his head in the tent," said John P. Henry, a chemical-industry analyst for E.F. Hutton. "He likes it, and eventually the guy inside the tent is out in the cold."

Peter E. Butler, an analyst at Paine Webber Inc., thinks that many Wall Street analysts who were not worried two years ago are now more concerned about the effect of Saudi capacity on companies in the United States. 'It's naive to expect that this stuff is just going to be sold in Japan," he said. "It's going to upset worldwide markets." And Anantha K.S. Raman, an industry analyst with his own firm in Parsippany, New Jersey, "will create disruptions in the marketplace for a couple of years without any question."

Mr. Raman thinks that the Saudis may not succeed in the long term. The cost of the new plants offsets the Saudi advantage on raw materials, he believes, and in three to five years "they're going to find out that they are losing money," he said. "My forecast is that some of these facilities are going to be left to bake in the sun.'

But the U.S. petrochemical makers were hurting even before the new Saudi production.

The U.S. is already going through problems because of the high value of the dollar, declining profit margins and low ices," said Joseph H. Posevina, chemicals analyst at McGraw-Hill's Data Resources Inc. There's been a whole shake-up over the last two or three years, (Continued on Page 11, Col. 1)

Phillips Rejects Icahn Bid, Alters Restructure Plan

NEW YORK - Phillips Petroleum Co. rejected Thursday the $8.1-billion takeover bid from Carl C. Icahn, sweetened the terms of its proposed restructuring and proposed new defenses against hostile takeovers.

Phillips said Thursday that, while it was not trying to attract a better offer and did not believe it could get the best price in a sale in the current oil market, it would not oppose any offer worth at least $9.6 billion, or $62 a share in cash for all shareholders. Mr. Icahn, a New York financier, has offered $55 a share, half in cash and half in securities.

Wednesday, at the deadline Mr. Icaha had set for a response to his offer, Phillips, based in Bartlesville. Oklahoma, announced that it had filed suit against Mr. Icahn and his Icahn Capital Corp. in U.S. District Court in Tulsa, alleging violations of securities law.

Mr. Icahn had said he would take his offer directly to shareholders if Phillips's board turned it down. The suit was an attempt to block Mr. Icahn from beginning such an offer, from soliciting shareholder support or from voting his 7.5 million shares, 4.85 percent of Phillips's outstanding stock.

Phillips alleged in the suit that Mr. Icahn did not file required proxy statements with the Securities and Exchange Commission in connection with his takeover bid and in connection with his opposition to Phillips's plans for restructuring. The suit also alleged that Mr. Icahn made "numerous false and misleading statements in con-nection with that solicitation."

Late Wednesday, U.S. District Judge H. Dale Cook issued a temporary order to block Mr. Icahn from taking legal action in the dispute in any other court. He sched-

More than six million of the company's shares changed hands.

Mr. Icahn is opposing a plan, submitted to Phillips shareholders that calls for the repurchase of 38 percent of the company's stock for securities with a face value of $60 a share. In addition, an employee stock plan would increase employee ownership of Phillips to a conrolling interest in the company.

Phillips originally promised that if the restructuring was approved it would spend up to $1 billion to buy its stock in the open market if the price of a share dropped below $50. It also promised to sell about $2 billion worth of assets.

Phillips said Thursday that it would amend its offer: Instead of buying its stock back in the open market, it will offer $50 a share for 20 million shares if the recapitaliza-tion plan is approved.

It also said it would offer shareholders a dividend of one share of a new class of preferred stock with a face value of $3.32 for each remaining common share after the restructuring is approved. Each new share of common stock under the restructuring would be equivalent to 0.62 share of pre-restructuring stock.

Mr. Icahn made his bid as an alternative to the original recapitalization proposal, which he called "grossly inadequate." He asked that the shareholder meeting be postponed so that stock owners could choose between Phillips's plan and his offer.

Phillips's management agreed to seek shareholder approval of the restructuring as part of the settle-ment it reached in late December to end a takeover bid by a group led by T. Boone Pickens, chairman of Mesa Petroleum Co. In an attempt to ward off further takeover attempts, Phillips's board said Thursday that on Feb. 18 it would issue shareholders a conditional right to exchange each share of common stock for a one-year note redeemable at $62 a share and bearing 15 percent in interest. That uled a hearing for Tuesday.

Phillips stock rose 25 cents to $50 Thursday in extremely heavy
New York Stock Exchange trading.

Option would expire if the restructuring were approved and would be exercised only if a suitor acquired at least 30 percent of Phillips stock.

A hostile suitor could avert the expense of redeeming those shareholder rights only by making a cash submitted to Phillips shareholders offer equal to or better than the for approval at a meeting Feb. 22.

1985 Forecasts Mixed For Hong Kong Growth

By Dinah Lee

HONG KONG — Hong Kong financial analysis are producing mixed forecasts this year, even though 1985 will be the colony's first year since 1980 without political uncertainty.

Banks and brokers publishing their annual forecasts have weighed a number of factors, including an expected slowdown in U.S. consumption of Hong Kong products, the degree to which China and Europe can take up the slack, the likelihood of a real-estate recovery. higher wages and increased domestic consumption, rising protection-ism and the continuing labor short-

This week, however, the chief executive of Laws Fashion Knitters, Lawrence Mills, said fewer than half a dozen of Hong Kong's textile producers could afford the expensive, computerized machinery needed to replace the estimated 60,000 workers in China whom Hong Kong exporters can no long-er use under the U.S. country-oforigin rules that went into effect last fall.

Hongkong & Shanghai also saw signs of improvement in the real estate market. Its report said the supply of residential apartments in 1985 would be larger than last year's, but added that "this is expected to be absorbed without any pressure on property prices." Wardley Investment Services, part of the merchant bank Wardley Ltd., was more conservative, predicting that real growth in GDP would differ little from the rate of 8 to 9 percent estimated for 1984. Wardley forecast that higher domestic demand would partly offset an expected loss of momentum in exports, particularly to the United States. The report noted that, since August, China has been the largest market for Hong Kong exports af-ter the United States.

Wardley analysis warned that neither China nor Europe can make up for the inevitable slack in domestic exports resulting from the U.S. slowdown. In the first 11 months of 1984, the value of domestic exports to China rose 78.8 percent from a year earlier, but nonetheless accounted for only 7.5 percent of local merchanding sales. percent of local merchandise sales abroad, a far cry from the 45.2 percent represented by domestic exports to the U. S."

Wardley was also less optimistic about protectionism. "On the basis of U. S. restrictions on textile im-ports amounced during the second half of 1984, some 5 percent of the value of domestic exports will face additional restraints in 1985," it said. "Negotiations with Washington should not raise high hopes for a repeal or diminution" of the new textile rales.

2500 ON THE DOW

The image of mankind, as theorized by Freud, suggests that all people are mentally ill, a dictum that blends with Schopenhauer's notion that "intelligence is, in some sense, innately bent on self-annihilation". Their philosophies were mirrored by Aldous Huxley, who wrote... "The leech's kiss; the squid's embrace; the prurient ape's defiling touch. And do you like the human race? Not much....".

Huxley's gloom was at variance with the noble nature of man as seen by his grandfather, T.H. Huxley, a staunch supporter of Darwin. Huxley mused.. "Man alone possesses the marvelous endowment of intelligible and rational speech, and stands possesses the marvelous endowment of intelligible and rational speech, and stands raised upon it as on a mountain top, far above the level of humble fellows and transfigured from his grosser nature by reflecting, here and there, a ray from the infinite source of Truth". It may seem sacrilegious to transpose T.H. Huxley's optimism to such mundane matters as stock markets. His vision was celestial, most investors to such mundane matters as stock markets. His vision was celestial, most investors see no further than the "Tape".

Mankind's lack of vision is endemic, only a few mortals capture the "brass ring".

Mankind's lack of vision is endemic, only a few mortals capture the "brass ring". Mankind's lack of vision is endemic, only a few mortals capture the "brass ring". The rest spin in disarray, on a carousel controlled by innovators, the "Power Elite". The basic premise of our investment philosophy is "contrarian"; the rational belief in tomorrow, in dawn, not dusk, the ability to perceive what the "Crowd" rarely senses, the cerebral guts required to defy orthodoxy.

In 1982, while the DOW was under 800, while the "Street" was cringing, we mocked the consensus, predicting "THE DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000, BEFORE HITTING 750". And now?

This remains a classic time to buy, not to sigh; a theme we vocalized during the market's last malaise, a malaise that infected thousands of investors. The market subsequently erupted on the upside; it will erupt again, vaporizing prophets of doom, escalating over 2500.

Our current letter tocuses upon senior securities that appear poised for a major upswing; in addition, we review a low-priced, emerging stock that may emulate the success of a recently recommended "special situation" that spiralled 800% in a brief time-span, after discovering a large oil and gas field in Texas. NEW YORK — Fueled by the continued strength of the dollar. another surge in American travel to Europe is in the making, and the major international airlines are al-ready adding flights and destinations for the peak summer season.

Stewart G. Long, senior vice president for marketing at Trans World Airlines, said in a news conference Tuesday that so far this quarter the carrier's bookings for international flights, including the seats it will offer on flights across summer period, are up 122 percent the Atlantic during the summer over the pace of last year's strong peak period. Nokia Sees Stronger High-Tech Sales in 1985 Eastern Settles

By Juris Kaza
International Herald Trebune
STOCKHOLM — Ov Nokia
AB, the electronic industrial chemical and forest conglomerate that is Finland's largest private corpora-tion, has said that sales in its highechnology divisions would continue to grow strongly in 1985 and that earnings "would develop more favorably" than in 1984.

Nokia's preliminary report this week did not give specific 1984 profit figures, but analysts in Swe-den estimated that the Finnish group's net profits probably grew by a maximum of 10 percent from the 1983 level of 104 million markkaa ($15.4 million).

They said that earnings growth was slowed by the poor profitabili-ty of Nokia's cable division and higher production costs in its electronics divisions as a result of last year's worldwide component shortage.

"Although there is nothing on earnings in the report, the assumption of earnings is around 10 percent, which is below expectations," one analyst at a Swedish brokerage said Thursday.

He said it appeared that profits were lower than expected in the new consumer-electronics division, created with Nokia's 1984 acquisition of Oy Salora, a Finnish colortelevision company, and Luxor AB, a Swedish television, computer and electronics group,

The report said that Nokia group sules in 1984 climbed 37 percent to 9.40 billion markkaa from 6.97 bilis group's returns on net assets lion markkaa in 1983, and the company forecast that sales would grow by 15 percent in 1985. Nokia's report stated that sales of the electronics industrial group rose 37 percent in 1984 to 1.825

But one London analyst who specializes in Scandinavian markan in 1983. It predicted that sales in this sector, comprising telegrormance was "about in line with expectations."

The properties of the Weldon analyst who illies markkan from 1.329 billion ics, were 1.2673 billion markkan and increase of 28 percent over the companies combined 1983 sales of 1.312 billion markkan. Nokia said other electronic equipment.

ics group's returns on net assets improved despite large investments in research and development.

Sales for the Salora/Luxor group, making television equip-ment and other consumer electronoffice procedures and begin to perform rote tasks themselves. Work is now under way at Microsoft Corp. in Bellevue, Washington, on a system that monitors the user's every move, looking to detect patterns. In time, the program would begin to catch on. It would suggest short cuts, reminding the user that the spreadsheet program, for example, includes a feature that copies a column of numbers so that time does not have to be wasted typing them in again.

Or it might catch an inadvertent omission that deviates from the user's ordinary pattern, saving the user embarrassment. "Fley, idiot," a darticinarly caustic deogram might type across the screen, "don't you usually send a copy of this report to the slob who sits in the next office?"

Such a program would be a "pas-sive learner," and the risk is that it could pick up bad habits or discover patierns of activity that lead it astray.

Some at the Phoenix conference suggested, only half in jest, that software makers eventually will package their programs like detergent:

SALES RISE 28%

At its meeting on January 24, 1985, the Board of Directors decided to declare an interim dividend of 9 francs (plus tax credit, 4.50 francs, making a total of 13.50 francs). This interim dividend will be payable on ution of coupon No. 40.

The Board was informed of the Group's operations over the past year. Provisional sales figures work out to 6,840 million france.

The Moët-Hennessy Group has for the first time presented its consolidated financial statements in accordance with American standards. Retreatement of 1983 sales figures according to the same standards would produce a figure of 5,337 million franca, in which case year-on-year sales growth would have amounted to 28.2%

The Champagne and Wines sector reported a strong rise in volumes sold (up 18% in volume terms for Champagne). The sector's revenues were up (up 18% in volume terms for Champagne). The sector's revenues were up (up 18% in volume terms for Champagne). The sector's revenues were up 18% on the previous year, to 3.070 million francs.

Kansallis-Osake-Pankki To Open a Branch in N.Y.

By Brenda Hagerry International Herald Intune LONDON — Kansallis-Osake-Pankki, Finland's largest commercial bank, said it plans to open a branch in New York later this year. The branch will be headed by Peter Fagernas, currently deputy general manager of KOP's London branch. The move is a further step in the expansion of the Helsinki-based bank's international operations and marks the first time that a Finnish bank has opened a branch in the United States. Since 1979, KOP has held a stake in Nordic American Banking Corp., a New York-based consor-tium. It now has indicated its intension to divest itself of that holding. The sale will mark the second time in as many years that KOP has opted out of its stake in a consortium bank. In mid-1983 it sold its 25-percent share in Nordic Bank PLC, a London-based consortium with a Singapore branch and a Hong Kong finance company. Jankko Lassila, Kansallis's chief

Following the sale of its holding in Nordic Bank, KOP opened in April 1984 a branch in London, the first branch anywhere outside of Finland for a Finnish bank, and in November set up a subsidiary in In other moves in its international expansion, KOP acquired in March a majority shareholding in Nordfinanz-Bank Zurich and in September announced plans to opened a representative office in Stockholm.

Mellon Bank has appointed Dennis S. Maliszewski, vice presi-dent for global cash management, to head its newly reorganized cashmanagement effort in Europe, Africa and the Middle East. Mr. Maliszewski, who moves to London from Mellon's headquarters in Pittsburgh, said "This location will better enable Mellon to offer noncredit products to financial institutions, corporations and governments within the territory. Wozniak Is Leaving Position As Apple's Chief Engineer

LOS ANGELES — Stephen Wozniak, who as to-founder of Apple Computer Inc. helped launch the age of personal computers, is leaving his day-to-day duties at the company to start a home-video business that he says "will have nothing to do with computers."

Apple confirmed Wednesday that Mr. Wozniak, 33, will give up his role as a principal engineer at the company, which is based in Cupertino, California, but will remain on its payroll as a consultant. He will take with him another key Apple engineer, Joe Ennis, Apple

Mr. Wozniak's departure was announced to Apple employees

Tuesday in a company newsletter.

Mr. Wozniak is widely considered to be an engineering genius, and his entrepreneurial philosophy of high technology and togetherness helped create Silicon Valley's iconoclastic corporate culture.

Mr. Wozniak declined to give details about his newest project except to say it will be based around the use of video in the living room and will not replace anything that exists. He said that he plans to finance the project himself and to have a product for sale next fall. Mr. Wozniak has made an estimated $100 million as co-founder of the company that gave birth to the desk-top computer industry and is International Business Machines Corp.'s biggest competitor in that

Along with the Apple chairman, Steven Jobs, 29, Mr. Wozniak founded the company in a garage in Los Altos, California, in 1976. The company's sales grew to $387 million by 1981, when Mr. Wozniak, who is credited with developing Apple's first major success, the Apple 11 computer, left the company to bankroll another brainshild the most 'n' roll experts called 118 Festivals that eventually ran child: two rock 'n' roll concerts called US Festivals that eventually ran several million dollars in the red. He also earned a degree in computer science from the University of California at Berkeley.

By the time Mr. Wozniak returned to the company in 1983, Mr. Jobs and Apple's president, John Sculley, had expanded annual sales to $1 billion.

An Apple spokeswoman said Wednesday that, throughout the company's history, Mr. Wozniak has been more interested in engineering problems and Mr. Jobs has been more concerned with marketing and sales. Mr. Wozniak "told me he's been thinking of leaving for over a year," the spokeswoman said. "He said the video venture will have

THE SURVIVAL OF CHARLES DARWIN: A Biography of a Man and an Idea

Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

By Ronald W. Clark. 449 pp. $19.95.

Reviewed by Edwin M. Yoder Jr. R ONALD CLARK has had the bright idea of treating Charles Darwin as if the great naturalist (and his natural selection theory) were themselves engaged in the great "struggle for existence" which he identified in 1859 as the shaper of life forms.

It is a brilliant literary conceit, offering Clark a handy framework for a fascinating study in intellectual history - not merely the genesis of Darwinism but the challenges set in its way from Darwin's day to our own.

If you're one of the millions who've imag-ined that Darwinism, because problematical and still disputed, has been on that account invalidated, this is probably your book.

Clark ultimately concludes that Darwin and his theory have indeed survived, despite hazards that might have relegated a shakier, less useful theory to the scientific dustbin. Such loss or overthrow occurs often enough in the history of science. When Darwinism was young, struggling for a foothold in mid-Victorian times, it was believed that the propagation of light required a medium, the so-called "ether." The ether, thanks to the relativity revolution, is no more. Darwinism, in transmogrified form to be sure, stands.

So many obstacles lay before Darwin that near misses constitute a fascinating aspect of the story. Among the many what-ifs: What if Darwin had not been sickened by medical studies, and had not become a naturalist? What if he had not signed on as the naturalist of HMS Beagle, the oceanographic surveying ship; or if the Beagle had not visited the Galapagos Islands?

What if the distinguished ornithologist John Gould had not called Darwin's attention, soon after his return from the five-year voyage, to the curiosities of the mockingbirds and finches he'd brought back? That there were three species of the former, and 13 of the latter? What if, somewhat later, the sudden appearance of Al-fred Wallace's competing evolutionary theory had not spurred the dawdling Darwin to commit "The Origin of Species" to print? What if the reviewer for The Times of London had been one of the many hostile ones, not "Darwin's bulldog." Thomas Henry Huxley? What if Darwin's always touchy health had broken down?

To be sure. Darwin might have vanited all these hurdles. Nonetheless, all things considered. Darwin's success and "survival" illustrates the chanciness of scientific history -at least as much as the 40-year obscurity into which Mendel's contemporaneous genetic experiments fell. And of course, as Darwin explicitly recognized he had challenged the cosmology of his age quite as severely as Copernicus had the age for which the sun moved about the earth.

Even with the resurgence in the past 20 years of "creationism" as an allegedly "scientific" rival of evolution, it is hard for us to grasp the sense of shock that swept the Victorian world.

Darwin's theory seemed, first, to link man by implication to "lower" life forms; and, second implication to lower lite forms; and, secondly, to supplant the age-old belief in a special, purposive creation with the chilling view that all species gradually arose by a blind, grouping process of competition, struggle and adapta-

There were some who sought, immediately, to soften the blow by attempting to reconcile evolution with divine design. But of one of these efforts, Darwin observed that "the airthor makes God a great breeder of animals, who selects & works like an improver of short. horns or a pigeon fancier." As Clark shows, it is mistaken to think that scientists rallied to the theory while churchmen scorned and denounced it, there were praise and objection on both sides, though it would be some time both sides, though it would be some time before intellectual respectability shifted in its favor and the better lights of the church, such as Bishop Gore, sought to demonstrate the God and natural selection need not be mies. "At Oxford," Clark tells us, when the great spat over "The Origin of Species" raged. "Obadiah Westwood, professor of zoology, strougly proposed. the establishment of a permanent lectureship for the exposure of the fallacies of Darwinism." fallacies of Darwinism."

Finally, Darwinism was long haunted, was Darwin himself, by another great mysters.
Assuming that forms demonstrably evolved, then stabilized into new species, what was the mechanism? There was much groping in bling alleys until, in succession, the rediscovery of Mendel, the genetic experiments of Thomas Hunt Morgan, and the breaking of the DNA code finally unveiled the secrets of hereditary

However formidably challenged, Darwin survived; and that for good reasons. He was the most careful, patient and assidnous of observers. The poor man, exclaimed his gar dener, might "moon" over a mere flower minutes at a time. His kindness and intellectival honesty were legendary. He strove to anticipate difficulties and objections and face them candidly. When puzzled he admitted it, as may his famous remark that the complexity of the human eye made him "shudder." He had, said his son Francis years later, "the power of never letting exceptions pass unnoticed."

Today, the overwhelming majority of biologists argue over how, not whether, evolutionary variation occurs. And while the recent trend seems to have set in against "neo-Darwinism" and indeed to some degree against "natural selection" itself as the sovereign mechanism of change, there is no serious question of Dar win's permanence. Darwinism, a powerfut, comprehensive and adaptable theory, has met the test of survival of the fittest.

Clark's is a fascinating, if at times formidably technical, study of one of the great episodes in the history of science, ancient or modern, covering the whole story from the incubation of Darwin's earliest doubts about the permanence of species to the latest quarrels over taxonomy. The Survival of Charles Darwin is, in short, an important contribution to the understanding of a much misunderstood subject, and deserves a survival of its own.

Edwin M. Yoder Jr., a syndicated Washington columnist, wrote this review, which appeared in The Washington Post.

A Question of Too Many Generals: Flutie Reports to Camp, Sipe Departs

JACKSONVILLE, Florida — On the day that Doug Flutie re-ported for his first workout with his new team, the New Jersey Generals traded their veteran quarterback, Brian Sipe, to the Jacksonville

The Bulls announced that in exchange for Sipe, a 36-year-old entering his 12th year in pro football, the Generals received a high draft pick and other considerations in he agreement between U.S. Football League clubs.

With Flutie earning more than $1 million a year and Sipe receiving an estimated $700,000, New Jer-sey's coach, Walt Michaels, was faced with the prospect of having to beach one star.

The team's owner, Donald Trump, who formally signed Flutie Tuesday in a ceremony in New York, knew the Heisman Trophy winner from Boston College would have to play in order to sell tickets and increase television ratings, making his contract worthwhile to the club.

Sipe reported to camp, amid ru-mors of Flutie's signing, well-rested and in good shape. He had main-

Sports-Franchise Bills Are Debated

Cosell was at his bombastic best Wednesday, lecturing a Senate Judiciary Committee on the history and theology of sport. But when Cosell, who had been invited to testify about two sport-franchise bills, began to instruct the Senate lawyers on the fine points of law, their patience wore thin.

victory in its last six games.

"It is not for you to come here and give us a law-school lecture," said Senator Dennis DeConcini, Democrat of Arizona, interrupting Cosell in midsentence.

Cosell was one of five sports fig-ures, including Donald Trump, the owner of the U.S. Football League's New Jersey Generals, who testified Wednesday on the worth and worthlessness of two bills designed to keep professional teams from jumping cities.

The two bills, one sponsored by DeConcini and the other by Senasor Arlen Specter, Republican of Pennsylvania, are among a series of bills Congress is considering to pre-vent owners of professional sports teams from abandoning hometowns for other cities with better financial offers. On Monday, another Senate committee heard testimony from the chief executives of five professional sports on two similar sport-franchise bills.

Three witnesses and one comchairman of the Judiciary Com- mittee member said they do not mittee. "In Baltimore, to the consternation of outraged fans and city officials, the Colts' assets were removed in the middle of the night!"

Jay Moyer, counsel to the com-missioner of the National Football League, told committee members the NFL is powerless to stop team owners from moving at will as a result of a $49-million antitrust judgment against the league for trying to keep the Raiders from moving from Oakland to Los Angeles.

That ruling "imperiled the relationship between teams in professional sports and their communi-ties," said Moyer, who urged passage of DeConcini's bill to broaden his league's antitrust exemption and restore "team-community stability."

Cosell argued that DeConcini's bill, by giving the NFL "blanket exemption" would contribute to the NFL's "ongoing arrogance and andacity." He voiced support for Specter's bill, which is more narrowly focused on establishing specific guidelines for the approval of franchise moves.

"I think it's time to put a stop to the kind of wrongdoing the NFL fight it out," he said. "Repeal the has been guilty of," said Cosell, support any of the bills being con-sidered. Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the NFL Players Association, and Doug Allen, executive director of the USFL Players Association, said all of the legislation would increase the power of owners at the expense of the play-CTS.

Trump was equally opposed to giving the NFL any more of an advantage than it already has over the struggling USFL

"The NFL must be subject to antitrust, just as any other busi-ness," said Trump.

Most vociferous in his opposition to the current spate of bills was Senator Howard Metzenbaum Democrat of Ohio. "This nation faces serious prob-lems," he said. "Our deficit ap-proaches $200 billion. We are in the middle of an arms race. Unemployment is going up. And we sit here debating sports. Why? Having created the monopoly, Congress inevitably must deal with its evils. I say it's time to get Congress out of the business of regulating."

The Processing Process

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — For a long time after going into the writing business, I wrote. It was hard to do. That was before the word processor was invented. Whenever all the writers got together, it was whine, whine, whine. How hard writing was. How they wished they had gone into dry cleaning, stonecutting, anything less toilsome than writing.

Then the word processor was invented, and a few pioneers switched from writing to processing words. They came back from reports: "Have seen the future and it works." That sort of thing.

I lack the pioneer's courage. It does not run in my family, a family that arrived on the Atlantic beach 300 years ago, moved 50 yards inland for security against high tides, and has scarcely moved since, except to go to the drugstore. Still, one cannot hold off forever. My family had given up saddle and stirrups for the automobile, hadn't it? I, in fact, used the light bulb without the slightest sense of be-traying the solid old American val-

My trade was writing, not processing words. I feared or detested almost all things that had "process-ing," "process" or "processed" attached to them. Announcements by airplane personnel that I was in a machine engaged in "final landing process" made my blood run cold. Processed words, I feared, would be as bland as processed cheese.

So I resisted, continued to write. played the old fuddy-duddy progress hater when urged to take the easy way and switch to processing

When former writers who had turned to processing words spoke of their marvelous new lives, it was the ease they always emphasized.

The processing process made life so easy (this was what they always said) - so infinitely easier than writing. Only an idiot - and here I caught glances fraught with meaning —only an idiot would continue to suffer the toil of writing.

To shorten a tedious story, I capitulated. Why are we moved to act against our best judgment? Because we fear public abuse and ridicule.

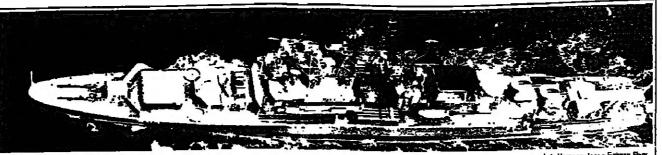

Thus the once happy cigarette addict is bullied out of his habit by abuse from health fanatics.

My hesitation about processing words was being noticed by aggressive young persons who had processed words from their cradles and thought the spectacle of someone writing was as quaint as a fourchild family. I hated being quaint. I switched to processing words, and - man alive! Talk about easy!

It is so easy, not to mention so much fun - listen, folks, I have just switched right here at the start of this very paragraph you are read-ing — right there I switched from the old typewriter (talk about goose-quill pen days!) to my word processor, which is now clicking away so quietly and causing me so little effort that I don't think I'll ever want to stop this sentence because - well, why should you want to stop a sentence when you're real-Iv well launched into the thing the sentence, I mean - and it's so easy just to keep her rolling right along and never stop since, anyhow, once you do stop, you are going to have to start another sentence, right? - which means coming up with another idea.

What the great thing - really great thing - really and truly great thing is about processing words like this, which I am now doing, is that at the end, when you are finally finished, with the piece terminated and concluded, not to say ended, done and thoroughly completed to your own personal, idiosyncratic, individual one-of-a-kind distinctive taste which is unique to you as a human person, male or female, adult or child, regardless of race, creed or color - at the end which i am now approaching on account of exhausting available paper space the processing has been so easy that I am not feeling the least, slightest, smallest or even somewhat minuscule sensation of tired fatigue exhaustion, as was always felt in the old days of writing when the mechanical machines, not to mention goose-quill pens, were so cumber-somely difficult and hard to work that people were constantly forever easing off on them, thus being trapped into the time-wasting thinking process, which just about does it this week, spacewise, folks.

Ship political officer led the 1975 mutiny on the Storozhevoy and its unsuccessful dash for Swedish haven.

The Mutiny on the Storozhevoy

By Norman Black The Associated Press

7 ASHINGTON - In the pre-dawn Washington - in the Soviet darkness of Nov. 8, 1975, the Soviet missile destroyer Storozhevoy quietly slipped its lines and headed out to sea from the Soviet port of Riga. For hours, according to research by a U.S. naval officer, no one in the Soviet navy knew the ship was gone.

So began an extraordinary, although ultimately unsuccessful, mutiny. New details of the incident have just been published. Before the incident was over, this account states, the Storozhevoy would move well out into the Baltic Sea on a dash toward Sweden and the West, only to be turned back by attacking Soviet planes and other ships.
At least a dozen sailors were killed during the incident, the summary adds, and the leader of the mutiny was later tried and shot. After a final cruise in the Baltic, the Storozhevoy was transferred to the Soviet Pacific

The attempted flight of the Storozhevoy has been reported by U.S. and European newspapers, but never acknowledged by the Soviet Union. Now, however, a more detailed account has emerged.

An investigation by the American officer paints a picture of harsh living conditions on board the ship; of a young, trusted political officer and an unusual series of events that allowed the officer to take charge of a front-line warship — with most of its crew ashore - in a port close to international waters and

The detective work was performed by Lieutenant Commander Gregory D. Young, who earned a master's degree from the Naval Postgraduate School in 1982 by devoting his thesis to the Storozhevoy incident. His findings attracted little interest, however, until they were summarized this month in the magazine Sea Power. The U.S. Navv refuses to comment on Young's research, although sources say it has been accepted as the most

Now an instructor of naval officers at the University of Colorado, Young said recently he had received access to some classified materials on the mutiny, but he said he pieced together most of the information from other sources, including Russian immigrants who were in Riga and intercepted radio messages.

"There is no doubt the incident occurred." Young said. "There are still questions about the details and about what prompted it. But it definitely happened and there is no other incident like this that I can find" in the history of the Soviet navy.

According to Young, the mutiny on board the Storozhevoy was led by the ship's zampo-lit, or political deputy, an officer placed aboard every Soviet ship to maintain the ideological purity of the crew. The zampolit on the Storozehvoy, a modern 3,800-ton warship that was only three years old in 1975, was Captain Valery Mikhaylovich Sablin.

Reseacher pieces together an unusual combination of events that allowed a polical officer to try to flee with ship in 1975

Young describes Sablin as an unusual political officer, willing to listen to crew com-plaints during his lectures on Marxist thought without spouting the standard party line. Young says Sablin had been criticized in 1974 in the Soviet military newspaper Red Star for not running his political education meetings

Sablin delivered his last such lecture on the afternoon of Nov. 7, 1975, when many of the ship's officers and crew were on leave in Riga memorating the October Revolution.

That night, according to Young's research, Sablin, another officer named Markov, and a dozen or so petry officers locked the ship's captain in his cabin, tied up some other officers and ordered "a skeleon crew of unwary 18- and 19-year-old conscripted sailors' to take the Storozhevoy to sea.

As the ship moved out of port, one sailor jumped over the side, apparently unknown to Sablin, and managed to reach shore, Young said, citing secondhand accounts from a bus driver. It took the exhausted sailor more than two hours to reach naval headquarters in Riga and convince a duty officer that some-thing was wrong on the Storozbevoy.

Even then, it was only after one of the officers on board the ship managed to untie himself and reach a radio to broadcast an emergency message that Soviet authorities realized what was happening. By then, the ship was steaming across the Baltic for the Swedish island of Gotland.

The 320-kilometer (200-mile) voyage from Riga to Gotland would have taken less than seven hours. Young added. But the commander of the Soviet Navy ordered the Storozhevoy stopped.

The remainder of the story was pieced together primarily through accounts provided Swedish journalists by Swedish military officials, Young said. Astonished radio operators in Sweden found themselves listening to transmissions between the mutineers and Soviet bombers sent to stop the ship.

The Storozhevoy refused the pleas of the pilots to heave to. Young said, and the planes eventually opened fire. "Evidence of the utter chaos and disarray clear," Young wrote, saying the Soviet bombers caused more damage to a pursuing ship than to the Storozhevoy. The Storozhevoy took evasive maneuvers, but never returned fire, Young said, "The Swedish intercepts indicate that the ship was finally recaptured around 8 A.M." on Nov. 8, 1975, only about 48 kilometers (30 miles) from Gotland, he said. The incident lasted about six hours: the mutineers apparently surrendered without resistance. Sablin and a number of enlisted members of the crew eventually were executed. Young concluded, Sablin after a three-day trial before the Military Division of the Supreme Court of the Soviet Union. "What is so fascinating, and what I spent s lot of time focusing on, were the possible causes," Young added. "And what I found were a lot of different things that all probably contributed - a lot of discontent on board. bad living and working conditions, ethnic frictions, alcoholism,

"And there were also the unusual circumstances of a trusted political officer on board a ship, without much of its crew, and located close to the West. I think it all contributed to this occurring this one time."
